ALL USE IT. IT IS AT EVERY PICNIC, IT IS IN EVERY KITCHEN.
It gives the finish to every dish, for gravies, soups, game, fish, or cold meats. It assists digestion and increases the appetite. It has a place at Government House, and is seen at every respectable artisan's. The proof positive was it because it is colonial, the free-trader because it is cheap. It is the especial favourite with all classes because, as one of the Sydney clergymen wrote "It is the best yet made." It is the

THE REFEREE,
A Weekly Illustrated Journal of News, Sport, Police, Adventure, and the Drama.
In introducing this journal to the Sydney public, the proprietors wish to call attention to the fact that to publish an eight-page high-class illustrated newspaper for the price of one penny is an instance of journalistic enterprise unprecedented in the annals of colonial journalism.
The letterpress of "The Referee" will comprise short and pithy leaders upon principal political and social events, and full and descriptive reports of all interesting law and police cases will be given, and under other headings there will be found a full budget of sporting, theatrical, and society matters.
As the very best procurable literary talent—including writers of brilliant attainments—has been secured, the proprietors feel justified in promising the Sydney public, in the "Referee," a paper which for humour, satire, and attractiveness shall be without a peer in the Antipodes.
In sporting matters "The Referee" will be an authority, and the Sporting Editor will place his services in any manner that courtesy may suggest at the disposal of the racing, cricketing, and athletic public generally, and will answer any questions and advise in all cases of disputed events.
The first issue of "The Referee" will be published on WEDNESDAY, the 24th instant, at 7 a.m.; and the price of the paper will be ONE PENNY.
All communications to be addressed to H. SOLOMON, Proprietor, Caxton Printing Office, 114½, Pitt-street.
On WEDNESDAY MORNING "The Referee" will be issued at 7 a.m., from Grattan's Press Agency, 124, Pitt-street.

COPY.
TO THE EDITOR "EVENING NEWS."
Sir,—In yesterday's issue of your paper it is reported that one M'Elhone, in a speech at Muswellbrook, stated that I had received a horse from a squatter, worth £150.
If correctly reported, I beg to state he told a lie.
Further, I am prepared to give £100, to be divided among the Sydney charities, if he can prove his words.
I am,
Yours faithfully,
JOSEPH REBELLO.

AUCTION SALE, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20.
AUCTION SALE, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20.

BUSHY HILL is EIGHT MINUTES' walk from Homebush Station, and twelve minutes' walk from Redmyre.
BUSHY HILL is on the HOMEBUSH ROAD, in a direct line from the Station.
BUSHY HILL is bounded on one side by the REDMYRE BOULEVARD, leading direct to the village.
BUSHY HILL is SPLENDIDLY ELEVATED LAND, with fine slopes, and is lightly timbered with Turpentine trees.

BUSHY HILL, HOMEBUSH, FOR AUCTION SALE, ON THE GROUND, SATURDAY NEXT, NOVEMBER 20, 2.30 p.m., by HARDIE and GORMAN.

BUSHY HILL is surrounded by GREEN FIELDS and HOME PARKS, and is close to many palatial residences.
BUSHY HILL is liberally subdivided into large ALLOTMENTS, and in such a way that any purchaser can secure A BLOCK OF NEARLY 400 FEET DEEP, having a frontage to two wide roads.
BUSHY HILL. THERE ARE NO SMALL ALLOTMENTS, and only a few less than 200 feet deep—there is no low land on the estate, which is on a hill side.
BUSHY HILL. THE SURROUNDINGS ARE MOST RURAL and picturesque, and glimpses of fine woodland scenery are obtainable from any part of BUSHY HILL.
BUSHY HILL. THERE ARE NO BACK LANES OR NARROW ROADS on the property, and the drainage is perfect.
BUSHY HILL. BUSHY HILL IS QUITE IN THE COUNTRY, though only 8 MINUTES' walk from Homebush Station, and within a FEW MINUTES' RIDE OF THE CITY.
HOMEBUSH. This suburb IS NOT AFFECTED BY THE STRONG SEA BREEZE, which is so injurious to many.
HOMEBUSH. Residents of the overcrowded suburbs are already moving further out, and HOMEBUSH IS RAPIDLY IMPROVING. What is required can be found at Bushy Hill—OPEN COUNTRY, PURE AIR, CHEAP LAND, AND LONG TERMS.

BUSHY HILL, HOMEBUSH, FOR AUCTION SALE, ON THE GROUND, SATURDAY NEXT, NOVEMBER 20, 2.30 p.m., by HARDIE and GORMAN.

BUSHY HILL. To the above advantages can be added LAND EIGHT MINUTES' WALK FROM A STATION, frequent and speedy communication with the city, a suburb rapidly rising in public favour—SUCH CAN BE FOUND AT BUSHY HILL.
BUSHY HILL. THIS SPLENDID PROPERTY will be sold by auction, on the Ground, WITHOUT RESERVE, on November 20.
BUSHY HILL. THE TERMS ARE TEN PER CENT. DEPOSIT, BALANCE EXTENDING OVER TWO YEARS, AT FIVE PER CENT.
BUSHY HILL. Lithographs are now ready, and inspection is invited.

HARDIE and GORMAN, Auctioneers.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE NEPEAN.
Gentlemen,—Parliament having been dissolved, I beg to announce myself as a Candidate for re-election. During the three years I have had the honour of representing you I have endeavoured to discharge the duties devolving upon me to the advancement of and benefit of the colony in general. I gave my hearty support to the Education Act, having introduced one new clause in the Bill, viz., fourteenth, giving children attending nearest Public schools free passes by rail. The next matter of importance was the grain Bill introduced by myself, making the standard weight of maize 66 pounds to the bushel. I gave my hearty support to the following important measures introduced by the late Government, viz., the amendment of the Lands Act, the new Electoral Bill, the Water Supply Bill, the Water and Sewerage Bill for country towns, the Endowment to Municipalities, and an Act to declare the law in respect to lands forfeited, with many others. I am not in favour of remission of interest. I am in favour of readjustment of the Municipalities law. I am opposed to Chinese immigration. As to local matters, I think you will admit I have done my duty. For the future, if elected, I promise to pursue the same independent course for your interest, and for the best interests of the colony as I have hitherto done.
I remain your most obedient servant,
T. R. SMITH.

JAS. B. JOHNSTON, Returning-Officer.
Windsor, 13th November, 1880.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE ELECTORATE OF THE HAWKESBURY.
Gentlemen,—Parliament having been dissolved by proclamation, which appeared in to-day's papers, I beg to announce myself as a candidate for re-election, and confidently solicit a renewal of your suffrages.
During the three years which I have had the honour of representing the Hawkesbury, I have endeavoured conscientiously to discharge the duties devolving upon me. I gave a hearty support to the new Public Schools Act, and to the several other useful measures introduced into Parliament by the existing Government. As to local matters I have done my best—as I think your candour will admit—to promote the best interests of the district, not omitting those connected with the welfare of the two principal towns, Windsor and Richmond, now incorporated in the electorate.
I endeavoured, as you are aware, to obtain two members for the district, but though unsuccessful it was through no fault of mine; whilst I have never hesitated to oppose proposals which I considered detrimental to the true progress of the country.
For the future, I will promise, if elected, to pursue the same independent and careful course for your interests and the interests of the colony generally which I have hitherto followed.
I will endeavour to keep down unnecessary taxation, and advocate retrenchment, wherever practicable, in the public service.
I purpose holding meetings at the various centres of population throughout the district prior to the day of election, when I will enter more fully into public questions than I deem it necessary to do in a published address. Due notice of these meetings will be given.
And, with many thanks for your past confidence in me,
I remain, your most obedient servant,
ALEXANDER BOWMAN.
Reform Club, Sydney, November 11, 1880.

FELLOW PROTESTANTS.—Do not, on this occasion, nor while the Catholics behave as they do, vote for a Catholic candidate if a Protestant be in the field. Roman Catholics never support Protestants, but vote in a body for Catholics as the priests order; and the members of Parliament again put in in this way vote in a lump as the Church directs. CATHOLICS ARE THUS NOTHING BUT A FOREIGN POLITICAL BODY IN OUR MIDST, going with one party to-day and another to-morrow, demoralising our politicians, and keeping the colony in a turmoil. See how it used to be when our two knights were opposed to each other. See also in the case of "Berry" and "Service,"—as exemplified lately in Sir John O'Shanassy's conduct. The Catholics are Romanists and not Australians; and so long as they allow themselves to be led by the priests can never be Australians.
This deplorable and dangerous state of things has been largely brought about, and is maintained through the priests having got their people to enter into a most unrighteous conspiracy against the rights and liberties of their fellow colonists—yours and mine. It is this, THEIR PEOPLE AGITATE AND VOTE AS THEY ARE DIRECTED, AND THE PRIESTS OBTAIN FOR THEIR PEOPLE GOVERNMENT PATRONAGE AND GRANTS FOR THEIR CHURCH; and if a return were called for in the House of appointments to the Civil Service, and grants of land and money according to creed during the last four or five years, it would be found that the priests, assisted by the members they send into Parliament, had so well carried out their share of the agreement AS TO OBTAIN FOR THEIR PEOPLE AND CHURCH THREE OR FOUR TIMES THEIR FAIR SHARE OF GOVERNMENT FAVOURS.
There is no use reasoning with Catholics, or trying to persuade them to behave as men and Australians, and I therefore earnestly urge my fellow Protestants throughout the colony to apply the only argument that will tell with them—VOTE ONLY FOR PROTESTANTS, and thus not only read the Catholics a lesson which they will remember, but te

The Leander ship, which arrived at Melbourne November 2, from Foochow Foo, with a cargo of tea, went aground on Lonsdale Bight on Tuesday, being bound for Sydney, with a portion of her original cargo. She returned to Hobson's Bay in tow of the steamtug Rescue, for survey. She is reported not to be making any water, but a large portion of her cargo must be removed before docking.

The ship Serapis, from Adelaide, landed a London cargo at that port, and she has come on here in ballast to load coats for Shanghai. Captain Parkhurst reports that the ship sailed on the 6th instant, but was becalmed for some time in Bass's Straits by light easterly winds. Severe S.W. squalls commenced on the 14th, and prevailed up to 4 a.m. on the 15th; since then had light easterly winds and calms. Sighted a ship beating to the northward on the evening of the 15th off Jervis Bay. On the same date passed the barque Southern Belle, bound to Newcastle.

The German schooner, Lina, sailed from Wangaroa on the 3rd instant, and during the first three days had fresh S.W. winds, then a day's calm, followed by light and variable winds throughout the remainder of the passage.

The Heron, schooner, cleared out at Maryborough, on the 8th instant, for Sydney, with 50,000 feet sawn timber, and 3 tons scrap iron.

The Smyrna, ship, Captain Jamieson, having completed the loading for London, in order to catch the February wool sales, cleared out yesterday at the Customs. The ship is in excellent order, and should make a good passage.

A ship was reported in the offing at Jervis Bay at 9 a.m. yesterday, bound north.

The Prompt, schooner, is reported in Broken Bay, wind bound.

The Elamang (s.) passed Port Macquarie, bound south, yesterday, at 9.20 a.m.

The Lusitania (s.) left Williamstown yesterday, at 10.30 a.m., and cleared the Heads at 1.30 p.m., for Sydney.

The Enaby (s.) passed Wilson's Promontory, bound to Newcastle, yesterday.

The Beagle (s.) crossed the Manning Bar at 6.30 p.m. on the 16th instant; experienced light northerly winds throughout and smooth sea; entered Sydney Heads at 5.15 p.m. on the 17th. Cargo: 36 hardwood logs, 150 bundles laths, 375 bags maize, 54 pigs, 8 cases eggs, 1 coop ducks and, 1 lizr.

MONETARY AND COMMERCIAL.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

There was more disposition to invest in Bank shares to-day, and in other respects the Stock and Share market was brisker; City Bank shares were firmer, all offered at 114 finding buyers, and more required at that figure; Commercial, fully paid, were dealt in at 105, and new issue in request at 88; Joint Stock unaltered, 152 offered, 146 asked; for Mercantile there was inquiry at 5⅛, sellers at 6; New South Wales had sales at 54; New Zealand stronger, the market was cleared of all obtainable at 20⅝; Queensland National sold at 7⅛, and were offered at 7⅝; no Oriental for sale; Union had buyers at 64, sellers at 65. Steam shares steady: Australasian improving, 18⅜ to 18½ realized, and 18⅝ demanded; Clarence and Richmond as before, buyers of old at 4, sellers at 4⅛, and preferential offered at 13; Hunter River had a smaller margin than yesterday, 7¼ refused, 7⅜ asked; buyers of Illawarra at 5⅛, sellers at 6; North Shore Ferry inquired for at 10s. 6d., for sale at 17s. 6d. Insurance shares had hardly any change: Accident were not offered below 1s. 7d.; Australian Fire and General still unobtainable: City wanted at 1s., offered at 1s. 3d.; Mercantile in request at 1s. 5d., held for 1s. 8d.; New South Wales salable at 75s., holders asked 80s.; buyers of Pacific at 63s., sellers at 64s; Sydney Fire had inquiry at 72s., held for 76s.; Sydney Marine could have been sold at 32s. 6d., none offered below 34s. 6d.; United in demand at 44s. for sale at 45s.; Queensland asked for at 50s. Australian Gaslight firm at 14⅛ sales for old, 5⅛ buyers for new, and none offered, Sydney Exchange equally scarce. Pyrmont Bridge asked for at 6⅞, sellers at 7⅛. Shale and Oil wanted at 9s. 6d., offered at 10s. 6d. Coffee Palace as before, buyers at par, sellers at 2s. 6d. premium. Volunteer land orders held for 140. Coal shares steady: Bulli in request at 11¼, for sale at 12; Wallsend were taken at 14⅜, and offered at 14½; buyers of Waratah at 7⅛, sellers at 7⅜; Vale of Clwydd salable at 16s. 3d., held for 16s. 9d. Great Cobar Copper strong, none for sale below 80s. 6d.; a concession of 1s. would have led to business. Band and Albion Gold hardly so firm; sales at 5⅞ to £5 14s; for Hustler's 11s was accepted—10s offered afterwards; Krohmann's had buyers at 2s., sellers at 3s.; Star of Peace in demand at 2s. 9d., for sale at 3s. No Debentures in the market: New South Wales funded fours inquired for at 97; long-dated fives at 110; City of Sydney sixes at 103, and A. S. N. at 102.

We are gratified at last to be able to announce that the banks in Sydney have arrived at an agreement as to rates on fixed deposits, which for the future will be 2, 3, and 4 per cent. for three, six, and twelve months respectively. Consequent upon this alteration, the discount rate on bills up to three months has been fixed at 6 per cent.; for four months, at 7 per cent.; and beyond that term, as before, at 8 per cent. The buying rate of exchange on London has been placed at ½ per cent. discount, and the selling rate at ½ per cent. premium on bank bills. To this arrangement all the banks, with the exception of the Bank of New South Wales, are parties; but from the amount that institution is known to hold unemployed, according to the published returns, we feel assured it will not object to the reduction in the rate of interest on fixed deposits.

The East Sydney election was more thought of in commercial circles to-day than effecting sales, and the result is highly satisfactory to those who are opposed to a protective policy for New South Wales. All the members returned are thorough free-traders. Breadstuffs maintain the improved tone noticed at the close of last week, sales of flour at £10 5s. to £12. Cement has fair trade inquiry, and commands from 17s. 9d. to 19s. 3d., according to brand and quantity. Currants are very salable, and as hardly any remain in first hands, the arrival of the Candida and Cairnbulg with fresh supplies is looked for by the trade. A line of Valencia raisins was placed at 7½d. In liquors, we note a great scarcity of Hennessy's Three-Star brandy, and sales of bottled ale at from 8s. 6d. to 10s. 9d. Fencing wire in moderate demand at £17 to £17 5s. for No. 10. Teas are selling a little more freely for trade quantities; a large line of medium half-chests was reported to have been disposed of on private terms. The sugar market continues very firm for all descriptions. In South Sea Island produce, we heard of the quittance of equal to 80 tons copra, ex recent arrivals, at £13. The Darling Harbour sales were well attended this morning, and for prime lots of hay prices ruled a little firmer. Eligible samples realized up to 5s. 1d. per cwt.; other sorts, from 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d. Lucerne brought from 2s. 4d. to 3s. 6d.; straw, from 2s. 2d. to 3s.; wheaten hay, from 3s. 6d. to 5s. 10d.; chaff sold well, good oaten bringing from 4s. 8d. to 5s. Business is dull at the wharfs. Lucerne hay is in full supply, but the qualities are not tempting to buyers, and there is very little bringing over £2 10s. per ton. Potatoes are in the same stagnant condition, agents trying to effect quittances at almost any price. Onions have declined, in consequence of the new crops beginning to come to hand. Prices this morning were quoted at from £5 to £14 per ton. Best butter commands a slow sale at 9d. per lb.; cheese worth from 4d. to 8d. We note a slight fall in bacon since last report, 6d. being the maximum to-day. Pigs (alive) are worth from 2½d. to 3½d.; lard, from 3d. to 4d. Fowls realize from 3s. 6d. to 5s. 9d. per pair; ducks, from 4s. 6d. to 4s. 9d.; geese, from 6s. to 7s.; turkeys, from 5s. to 12s. Eggs are rather dull at from 8d. to 9d. per dozen. Millet brooms are worth from 8s. to 10s. 6d. Honey is quoted at from 2½d. to 6d; beeswax, from 6d. to 10d.; tobacco leaf, from 4d. to 8d. per lb.

Messrs. Mort and Co. submitted a large catalogue to-day, and disposed of over 1700 bales. Competition was again very active for all fairly-conditioned lots. Greasy brought up to 14½d., and washed fleece 21½d. Among the lots sold were the following:—Greasy—DMcG, 44 at 11½d.; Tarengo, 78 at 11½d.; Murrulbale, 92 at 13½d.; THP over Enaldrie, 15 at 13½d.; Marengo, 55 at 12½d.; C under half-circle, 87 at 12d.; ⊲M, 32 at 12½d.; W over WP, at 12½d.; Double anchor, 52 at 10½d.; S in circle, 80 at 12½d.; PW, 16 at 14½d.; Rockview over DR, 84 at 13d.; PH in diamond, 23 at 11½d.; ET over 4, 41 at 12½d.; AG over NSW, 38 at 12d.; OY, 10 at 11½d.; RN, 27 at 10d.; HYB over Bendinine, 25 at 12½d.; JC, at 10½d. Fleece: Frankfield, 34 at 21½d.; EHP, at 18½d.; Burrowa over FH (hoggets), 21d.; CLN, 17 at 20d.; OR over Y, 13 at 19d.; MC, 18 at 19½d.; AJB over Riverside, 12 scoured at 18½d.; C&JP, 15 fleece at 18½d. Sheepskins were very firm: Full-woolled sold at 6d. to 7½d.; short at 4d. to 5½d.; pelts at 1½d. to 3½d.

The Smyrna cleared to-day for London, with 510 casks tallow, 137 bales leather, 4009 bales wool, 140 casks butter, 3052 bags copra, 1115 hides, 6 bales hair, 48 cwt. horns, 61 cwt. hoofs, 288 cwt. bones, 2 cases 1 quarter-cask wine.

Messrs. Goldsbrough and Co. report, by telegram, from Melbourne:—

We have this week sold 3800 bales at firm prices for average to superior; inferior to ordinary, small lots shade easier. Greasy ranged from 7d. to 13½d.; latter price for both Retreat and Benambra clips. Several greasy clips sold at from 12½d. to 13½d.; inferior to fair average, washed, realized 13d. to 21½d.; latter price for seventy-nine bales from Moorara station, River Darling.

The Customs duties received to-day were as follow:—Spirits, £1435 2s. 1d.; wine (still), £152 1s. 11d.; ale, porter, and beer (in wood), £17 10s—(in bottle), £6; tobacco and snuff, £153 14s.—unmanufactured, £459 4s.; cigars, £100 15s. 11d.; tea, £201; sugar (unrefined), £50; molasses, £18 8s. 9d; opium, £1 7s. 6d.; rice, £1 9s. 3d.; dried fruits, £50 18s. 8d; specific duty, £149 7s.; pilotage, £21 15s.; harbour and light dues, £8 4s.: total, £2826 15s. 3d.

TO THOSE ELECTORS OF CAMDEN who reside at
Cox's River, Cross Roads, Bringelly, Paddy's Swamp, Theresa Park, Wilton, Menangle, Cross Roads, Arthursleigh, The Tanks at Morris's Siding, Merrimbra, Paddy's River, Joadja, and Jordan's Crossing.

Gentlemen,—The unprecedented, unnecessary, and indecent haste with which the Government have thought fit to hurry on the Election for Camden renders it utterly impossible for me to appear before you personally to expound my political principles; therefore I am compelled to resort to this comparatively unsatisfactory mode of calling attention to my candidature.

However, as I have been before the public as a member of Parliament for twenty years, you are doubtless aware of my political opinions, and of my public services, and I must leave them to speak for me.

As to matters which must soon be dealt with by the new Parliament, I am in favour of the Public Instruction Act generally as it stands, and I will be no party to the repeal or modification of the 20th clause, which withdraws all money aid from the public funds to Denominational schools at the end of 1882. I am a free trader, in favour of direct taxation, and the formation of large municipalities. I am against the expenditure of such large sums of the public funds on immigration, and against permitting the landing of Chinese in this colony. I am strongly in favour of extending the area allowable to be conditionally purchased and other reforms in our land laws, and strongly opposed to the remission of interest. I am in favour of local option being applied as to licensing public-houses, to be expressed by four-fifths of the adult male and female population.

These are the principal matters to which allusion may be considered necessary.

Should I be returned, I shall, as I have done during the eight years I have been member for Camden, attend promptly and vigorously to all local matters placed in my hands.

I now leave the issue in your hands, in the fullest confidence that you will do me that justice that my long public service, large experience of public affairs and parliamentary business (which will be extremely useful in the new Assembly, composed, as it will be, of a large proportion of new members), and the soundness of the views I have expressed, fairly entitle me to.

I am, Gentlemen,
Yours faithfully,
THOS. GARRETT.

SUBURBAN HOMES AND GARDENS.

Plenty of Land at the delightful suburb of HOMEBUSH.

BUSHY HILL. LAND IS TO BE OBTAINED AT HOMEBUSH AT MODERATE RATES, AND THE LOCATION IS SO HEALTHY AND SALUBRIOUS that pretty villas and cottages, surrounded by gardens, are springing up all round, and Homebush will soon be the most favourite place of residence on the line.

BUSHY HILL. GREAT IMPROVEMENTS ARE ABOUT TO BE MADE AT HOMEBUSH STATION, and communication with the city will be so increased as to bring Homebush, by that means, as near to Sydney as Burwood now is.

BUSHY HILL. POPULATION MUST BE ATTRACTED BY THE MANY ADVANTAGES OFFERED BY THIS CHARMING SUBURB, and, as a consequence, land will increase in value enormously, therefore purchasers of "Bushy Hill" will not only procure the most desirable building sites, but the LAND WILL BE SOLD AT SUCH A PRICE AS WILL ENABLE PERSONS OF MODERATE MEANS TO ACQUIRE SUFFICIENT FOR A GARDEN AND HOMESTEAD, which, in a few years, will have so much increased in value as to enable the fortunate owners to realise a large profit, if desired.

BUSHY HILL. MONEY INVESTED IN A RISING AND IMPROVING SUBURB C

work, by simply giving higher prices in the first instance, it only makes a long-dated investment, and waits for the returns, just as a man does who plants an orangery which may yield nothing for half-a-dozen years. How much Government may legitimately give in excess of the imported price is a question that cannot be answered once for all. One candidate says ten per cent. But it is impossible to lay down a general rule. All that can be said is that it is possible to go to excess, and that prudence as well as foresight must guide.

Amongst the "humours" of the elections may be noticed the remark of one of the candidates for Parramatta, that the new Electoral Act, in depriving that constituency of one member, had conferred upon it the "greatest blessing," because hitherto Parramatta had had two members who had fought against each other like Kilkenny cats, and the constituency had been virtually disfranchised. It is not often that a candidate has the chance of congratulating a body of electors on the fact that, whereas they had formerly been able to return two members, they will henceforth send in only one. The general tendency is too much the other way. Some electorates have already been considering whether they ought not to have two, though the law allows them one only. The point of interest, however, is the theory of virtual disfranchisement. What is a constituency apart from the electors? If the electors vote with effect, they are not disfranchised, but if the effect of their votes is destroyed they are. Let a constituency divided into two equal parts in opinion return two members, one for each side, and, although they may fight like Kilkenny cats, the ideal of representation will be fully attained. But let that constituency return one member only, by a majority of one, and there will be virtual disfranchisement for nearly half the number of electors. This notion of disfranchising a constituency by procuring a nearer approach to the fair representation of the electors of whom it consists has been put forward before; but it has its origin in the substitution of an artificial grouping of electors for the men who are so grouped. It is the people themselves who should be represented in the Legislature.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The polling for East Sydney took place yesterday, and resulted in the return of Mr. G. H. Reid, Dr. Renwick, Mr. H. C. Danger, and Sir Henry Parkes. Mr. George Lay was returned for Albury yesterday, unopposed.

No change is yet to be recorded as regards the condition of the weather. Yesterday was again hot, and the unpleasantness of the atmosphere was intensified by occasional dust storms. Cool winds made the evening refreshing.

In the Supreme Court, yesterday, his Honor Sir Sir William Manning presided in the Banco Court. In "Stuart and another v. Barayene," an action nominally in trespass, though virtually one in which the title of Messrs. A. Stuart and Shepherd Smith to a portion of Gore's Estate, known as "Artarmon," at the North Shore, was in issue. The jury found a verdict for the defendant, in other words, that the title to the estate was in Mr. Thomas Broughton, the defendant's landlord. In the Jury Court, before his Honor Mr. Justice Windeyer and a jury of four, "Butler v. Hinton and others," for damages for trespass and forcible ejectment, was proceeded with. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, with damages £350.

With reference to a notice that appeared in the Government Gazette of Tuesday, stating that Wednesday, November 24, is to be a public holiday for the Macleay district, we learn that the holiday is not granted, as many persons suppose, on account of the election of Mr. R. B. Smith taking place on that day, but because there is to be the foundation-stone laid of some public edifice on that day, and the people at large have therefore petitioned for the holiday.

At the School of Arts, last night, Mr. Frederick Bevill, M.A., entertained a large audience by an interesting and instructive lecture, entitled "The Frozen World," being the sixth of his series of geographical lectures. Mr. Bevill principally referred to Siberia, dwelling at great length upon the rich mineral resources of the country, and graphically describing the manners and customs of the inhabitants. Before the entertainment concluded, by means of the tri-unial lantern, a series of twenty-five admirable views illustrative of the North Pole and its wonders, were shown. The lecturer was repeatedly applauded very heartily, and his remarks were always attentively listened to.

The following letter in reference to the first discoveries of gold in Victoria has been forwarded to the Chief Secretary of that colony:—"Tarnagulla, November 6, 1880. To the Hon. Graham Berry, Prime Minister of Victoria, per favour of the Argus. Sir,—From the Parliamentary proceedings arising from Mr. Story's motion on Wednesday, 3rd instant, in reference to Hargreave's reward as the discoverer of gold in Australia, it appears to me that there is considerable misapprehension respecting the facts of the case. As I played a conspicuous and important part in the gold discoveries in Victoria you will pardon me in making this explanation. I deny that Hargreaves has any claim whatever as a discoverer of gold in Victoria, his field being New South Wales, which was opened some short time previously. The first gold-field deserving the name in Victoria was Ballarat, the discoverers being—Hiscock, at Buninyong; Dunlop and Regan, at Golden Point; and myself, Brownbill's diggings, afterwards called Brownbills; and if Hargreaves visited these fields at all in those early days, it must have been when they were in full swing. As to Hargreaves receiving a reward from the Victorian Government for his discoveries in New South Wales, it would appear to me more in harmony with fair play to be just before being generous. My own discovery of the greatest goldfield in Victoria—and, I might say, the earth's broad platform—remains to this day unrewarded. At the time of the general distribution of rewards my claim was laid aside on the plea that it was too near another diggings. Now the only fields at that time in work were Golden Point and Brownbill's diggings, the distance between the two places being then considered fully four miles. I may add that when Governor La Trobe, accompanied by Captain Dana and a staff of black police, paid a visit of inspection to Ballarat, Brownbill's diggings was the first called upon, when the writer had the pleasure of initiating him into the mysteries of gold-washing. Trusting that your sense of justice will prompt you to act fairly in this matter, I have the honour to be—Yours, &c., W. Brownbill, J.P."

The anniversary sermons in connection with the Forest Lodge Primitive Methodist Church were preached on Sunday. On Tuesday evening, a public meeting was held in the church, Mr. H. Carruthers presided, and addresses, interspersed with choral selections, were delivered by the Revs. C. Waters, R. Mowbray, and B. Kenny, and Mr. J. M. Main. The receipts amounted to about £80.

In celebration of its anniversary, a public meeting was given in the Prince-street Wesleyan Church last night. The attendance was very small, and in consequence of the interference of the elections, little business of importance was transacted.

The annual meeting of the Burwood branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held last night, in the Wesleyan Church; Mr. John Plummer presiding. The Rev. R. W. Martin having opened the meeting in the usual form, the Rev. Mr. Young, before reading the report, apologised for the absence of the Rev. J. T. Evans, who had been expected to attend as a deputation from the parent society. Mr. Evans had been suffering from a severe illness, from which he was but just recovering when he undertook to take part in the anniversary of the Burwood branch society, but the death of the Rev. Mr. Rogers had given him such a shock that it had induced a relapse, and thereby he was prevented from fulfilling his engagement. Mr. Young then read the report of the proceedings of the Burwood branch during the past year. In the absence of the treasurer no financial statement could be furnished, but it was considered that the income would at least equal that of last year. The Rev. G. G. Howden then addressed the meeting in an interesting speech, explaining the extensive operations of the parent society, the income of which last year, by a special effort to meet deficiencies of no less than £30,000, amounted to £213,374. On the motion of the Rev. Mr. Young, seconded by the Rev. G. Hurst, a cordial vote of thanks was accorded to the Rev. Mr. Howden for his interesting and valuable exposition of the state and operations of the British and Foreign Bible Society. A doxology was sung, and Mr. Martin pronounced the benediction.

The annual picnic of the Dairymen's Protective Association took place yesterday at Mr. Frank Smith's grounds, adjoining the Sir Joseph Banks Hotel, Botany. Eight four-horse omnibuses, and about thirty private vehicles conveyed the visitors, who numbered about three hundred, to the grounds, which destination was reached about 12 o'clock. An efficient band was engaged, and dancing commenced immediately on arrival by most of the party, the remainder having ample means provided for their entertainment in the shape of cricket, swings, &c. Foot races, for which several valuable prizes were given, were also run for during the day, several being contended for by ladies as well as the sterner sex. At 2 p.m. dinner was served in the spacious pavilion, the viands and attendance being of such a character that the most exacting were loud in their plaudits of Mr. Smith's catering. The chair was occupied by Mr. James Coward, president of the association, and the vice-chair by Mr. John Navin. After the usual loyal and patriotic toasts were given and duly honoured, Mr. Bedwell proposed "The Dairymen of Sydney and suburbs" in a lengthy speech. The toast was warmly received, and, after being heartily drunk, was responded to by Mr. J. Smith. The "Pastoral and Agricultural Interests of the Colony" was proposed by Mr. P. R. Larkin and responded to by Mr. W. F. Martin. "Our Visitors" was proposed by the Chairman and responded to by Mr. E. A. Jones, who, in a speech that was greeted with loud applause, expressed entire satisfaction with all the arrangements that had been made for their comfort and entertainment. Other toasts were duly honoured, and the party arrived safely home soon after 7 p.m.

A bricklayer named Thomas Hoster died in the Infirmary yesterday. The man, while driving a cart on the 15th instant, was thrown out, through his horse starting unexpectedly. He fell on the kerbstone on his head, and the wheel of the cart passed over his neck. The patient continued in a precarious state for some time, and died eventually. The circumstance has been reported to the City Coroner.

The Bulli correspondent of the Illawarra Mercury gives the following particulars of the fatal accident to Mr. J. J. Barbour:—On Saturday morning last Mr. J. J. Barbour, manager of the E. S. and A. C. Bank, in company with the postmaster (Mr. Miller), went, as was their custom, to bathe early. After indulging in a swim in a creek adjacent to the shore they went into the sea close by. The surf was rolling strongly and the under current running with considerable force at the time. As soon as this was discovered Mr. Miller wisely decided not to go in the breakers too far, and on looking round for his friend he saw him out some distance, apparently swimming with ease, but on turning or trying to make for the shore again he was unable to do so. Mr. Miller could not render any assistance without greatly endangering his own life, and he at once ran for help, but being before 6 o'clock a.m. very few persons were near, and when the boat from the Bulli Company's jetty went around the place for the purpose of saving him nothing could be seen of his whereabouts. All through Saturday night a party with torches was on the lookout. It is feared the body will not be recovered. The unfortunate gentleman was only 22 years of age, and was the only son of a widowed mother.

The Postmaster-General of South Australia received the following telegrams (says the Register) from the telegraph stationmaster at Barrow's Creek:—"On Saturday morning (November 6), accompanied by police trooper South, I met, 50 miles south of the station, two men, viz., Anderson and Connor, in charge of bullock team loaded with rations for this station from Alice Springs, who reported that on Wednesday, 3rd instant, at 11 p.m., while sleeping, they were attacked by natives at Viol's Springs, on Woodforde Creek, about 85 miles south of Barrow's Creek, Anderson receiving spear in left breast, which ran along the bone for fully three inches, and Connor two wounds on the right shoulder, penetrating to the bone. The wounds appear slightly inflamed, but the man suffer very little inconvenience from them, and they think there is no danger of poison, as they are healing nicely, and give pain only when lifting any weight. Police-trooper South and myself travelled with them to within 16 miles of this station, where we left them this morning, and I have now sent a man out to camp with them to-night and escort them in to-morrow." The stationmaster at Barrow's Creek telegraphs later: "Anderson and Connor just arrived with team. The latter states that his wounds are healing all right, but slight running now issuing from Anderson's wound in the breast, and he states that he was spitting blood this morning, and he fancies there is a small piece of spearhead inside the wound. The spearhead was made of mulga, which is generally considered a poisonous wood."

A telegram to the Argus gives the following fuller particulars of the fatal railway accident, near Albury:—"On Saturday morning an accident, involving the death of two men and serious injuries to another, occurred on the railway line under construction between Geregery and Albury. An engine, driving six trucks in front of it loaded with rails, was travelling down an incline three miles from the Geregery railway station at the rate of nine miles an hour, when a bullock got in front of the foremost truck and sent it off the rails. The second waggon, being loaded with the same set of rails, also followed, the couplings of the third luckily breaking, and thus leaving the remainder of the train on the line. On the front truck were three swagmen from Temora, taking a lift towards Albury, named Walter Wright, William Anderson, and an old man named George (surname unknown), and the brakesman of the train. Immediately after leaving the rails the trucks ran into a wood heap and overturned, burying the old man George partially under the truck and killing him at once. Wright fell clear of the waggon, but was so badly crushed by the rails that he died within two hours of being extricated. Anderson sustained severe internal injuries, and now lies in a precarious condition in Albury hospital. The brakesman escaped with a bruise on his head. The bodies were brought into Albury, and a magisterial inquiry was held, when a verdict of accidental death was returned."

The Argus of Monday gives the following particulars respecting the box of gold supposed to have been stolen from the steamer Tararua:—On the arrival of the s.s. Tararua from New Zealand, on Saturday night, it was discovered that a box containing gold to the value of £5000 was missing from the bullion-room. Eleven boxes of gold were shipped in Dunedin, and when the strongroom was opened only 10 could be found. The missing box is consigned to the Bank of New Zealand, and contains five bars, each bearing the bank brand, and weighing in the aggregate 1250 oz. Telegrams have been forwarded to New Zealand and to Hobart Town, to ascertain if anything is known of the box at either place. It is conjectured that it may have been accidentally left behind at Dunedin, as the position of the gold-room would almost render it impossible for any one to open it without being detected. The room is built in with the ship, and is constructed entirely of strong iron, while the only entrance to it is by means of a trapdoor, fitted with a Chubb lock, in the saloon. The door was locked at Dunedin, and the key remained in the possession of Mr. Robertson, the purser, until the vessel reached Melbourne. [Up to the present time no clue has been obtained as to the missing bullion.]

Respecting Mr. Norton's condition the Dubbo Express of Monday says:—"The latest bulletin is that he is alive, but helpless. He is sensible, that is, he pretty well understands what is said to him, but is unable to speak, except through his eyes. The attention of Drs. Tibbits and Tennant is unremitting, and all that they can do is being done, but we are grieved to say they hold out no hope. The bullet is a large one for a pocket-pistol, that being one of the peculiarities of the Derringer, and being conical-shaped the difficulty as well as the danger is attempting to extract it, as its position is, as a matter of exactness, unknown. The woman was brought up on Friday before Mr. G. H. Taylor, J.P., and remanded for eight days."

In Sir Alfred Stephen's article on the Contempt of Court case, tenth line from commencement, for "abrivistion of the law" read "alienation of the law."

MELBOURNE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

MELBOURNE, Friday.

On Wednesday the justly popular Austrian Strauss Band played as a military band, on the Exhibition orchestra, in front of the great organ. On Tuesday the visitors were more numerous than on any day since the opening; and Wednesday being the first day of business after the race and birthday festivities, a very large gathering was not to be expected. When the new band first played in the Exhibition no additional charge was made, and there was an excellent muster. Now, when the musicians have been heard again and again, the general admission is doubled, and an extra shilling charged for a chair. The result was what might have been expected—some fifty persons occupied the enclosed space, which would have accommodated from 2000 to 3000; the galleries near the orchestra were filled, but the general attendance was below the average, and a fine selection of music was spiritedly played to the scantiest of audiences. For the musical combination known as Caron's Australian Band far better arrangements have been made. Saturday is the appointed day, and no change is to be made in the price of admission. This, I suppose, is the protective policy—Australian (?) musicians must be encouraged, and the imported players taught their proper place; the public, however, recognises and appreciates the merits of Herr Wildner's forces, as may be seen by the delighted crowds at the Town Hall. Wednesday's programme included a march, potpourri, and original cavatina by two members of the band, the "Konigsteds" and "Nile Floods," waltzes by Strauss, an overture by Suppe, and selections from operas by Verdi and Offenbach.

On Thursday, M. Henri Kowalski gave his second recital on the Philippe Herz pianos, before a large and admiring audience in and around the exhibitor's estrade, in the French portion of the eastern nave. M. Kowalski's programme consisted of six numbers—three of his own composition, one by Prudent, one by Schulhoff, and a banjo gavotte by M. Belcour, the French Consul. The Schulhoff Valse de Concert was displaced for an improvised waltz by the pianist, so that the recital was very nearly confined to his own music.

M. Belcour's gavotte received excellent interpretation, the banjo effects being strikingly reproduced; the paraphrase from "Faust" was apparently an improvisation, several of the leading melodies of Gounod's charming opera were introduced, but without any definite connection. The "Galop di Bravura" will be remembered as forming a part of M. Meilhan's Exhibition programmes in the early days of the Garden Palace. M. Kowalski played with vigour and brilliant dash, and was enthusiastically applauded.

As the P. Herrz pianos are comparatively new to Sydney, and have not been previously exhibited in the colonies, some account of them will be interesting to your readers.

The house of Philippe Herze, nephew of Henri Herz, was established in Paris in 1863, with M. Marcus-Kunst, whose qualifications and reputation as a leader among art workmen, in the piano manufacture, were great, as head of the manufacturing department. The merits of the instruments produced, the skill bestowed upon their mechanism, and several improvements introduced by the firm, secured the only gold medal awarded at the Paris Exhibition, in 1867; special recognition was made by a decree of the Government, conferring the Legion of Honour upon the head of the enterprising firm. M. Philippe Henrix Herz, however, gracefully waived the distinction, and requested that his lieutenant should be the recipient. M. Kunst was accordingly created Chevalier de la Legion d'Honneur.

The impetus thus early given to the firm was duly seized; the factory was extended, and already the firm is announced as makers to their Majesties the Kings of Italy, the Netherlands, and of Portugal, and to the National Academy of Music in France. Every portion of the instruments is manufactured upon the premises, and the several branches placed under the rigid control and supervision of thoroughly efficient workers, that every detail may be of perfect construction and finish. The action is the patent of the firm. The exhibits are 17 in number, of various styles as regards cases. In mechanism they include three classes—the grand, upright, and oblique. The full grand is of seven and a half octaves compass, full, rich tone, very sweet in the upper notes, with a light touch and action, which enables the player to "repeat" the note with the smallest possible pressure, each hammer is independent, the mechanism being so arranged that distinct portions are easily removeable; every care is taken to prevent friction and possibility of any noise except the sounds intended to be produced; the mechanism well repays the closest inspection for excellence of material, skill, and finish in workmanship. The instrument first used by M. Kawalski is cased in rosewood; the second a boudoir grand, the case elaborately painted in Renaissance (Louis XV.) style, intended to harmonise with the furniture of the room in which it is placed. The artist, Tony de Bergue, is "painter to the Royal Court of Portugal." He has shown taste and skill in the elegant designs painted, the piano is very elegant-looking, but scarcely likely to find general favour; it has the same qualities as those which distinguish the P. Herz pianos—purity and evenness in tone, and under M. Kowalsky's brilliant handling discoursed very sweet music. Another boudoir grand is of walnut frame, with lines of black wood; a fourth is in rosewood; a fifth in ebony, engraved and relieved by lines and scrolls of gold; a very elegant instrument. A sixth is framed in one variety of mahogany (acajou); not the wood which is generally known by this name, but of a light reddish tint, with dots or spots of a darker colour; in effect it is novel and pretty, and when thrown up by outer lines of dull ebonised wood, as in the case of several of the models, is very attractive. Four of the cottage pianos are in cases of this wood, two of walnut, two of rosewood, one of ebony polished, with dull relief lines, and one of ebony frame, with gold lines and engraving to correspond with the grand. The interior construction of the cottage pianos is equally good and highly finished as in the grands; the action is patent, every hammer is separately fastened and independent. The frame is of wrought iron, under bars are screwed into the wrestplank, and every provision made for preserving the balance throughout, and preventing the possibility of accident through changes of temperature, special tension, &c. The pins rest on cloth coiled in a peculiar manner, the patent of the firm, and this, and the arrangement of the bar in place of single agraffes, and numerous other details, attest the ingenuity of the manufacturers, and the fidelity of their work in detail. Two large grands are placed on the Exhibition Orchestra for the use of soloists at the Exhibition concerts. M. Philippe Herz is no longer living, his nephew and successor, M. Canut, represents the firm (H. Canut, Moritz, Iser, and Cie.) in Melbourne, and most courteously affords every facility for the examination of his instruments. Signor Vollaggi is in constant attendance, and frequently plays upon one or other of the pianos, and, as has been stated, M. Kowalski performs weekly. The firm has achieved considerable fame, and has an extensive European and American connection, and the instruments will doubtless receive a full share of patronage in Australia. In price they compare very favourably with the productions of other great firms.

Mdlle. Alice Charbonnet began her recital on the Ployel grand in the same court directly M. Kowalski had finished. I have before said that M. Kowalski is essentially a pianist of the French school, and your readers generally are familiar with the playing of the young lady, which though of the same style is necessarily less vigorous; the comparison was inevitable and to the disadvantage of the lady, who chose four pieces in succession, Invitation a la Valse (Weber), Mazurka B flat (Chopin), Pasquinade (Gottschalk), and the Spinnerlied from Wagner's Flying Dutchman. Sydney people who have recently heard these numbers on the Ployel grand in the Masonic Hall, will readily understand the contrast thus doubly forced upon some of the audience. The prayer from Mosi and M'Appari for the left hand were much applauded.

To-day and Thursday Mme. Tasca played on the Brinsemead full concert grand, at 5 p.m.; on the Bord, at 8, this afternoon, each time to large audiences, and at 4 p.m. there was a large gathering in the German piano saloon, where, on a specially-erected platform, Mlle. Charbonnet gave her opening recital on the Bluthner concert grand. Your readers are familiar with these fine pianos. I need therefore only say that the one used is a superb full concert grand of brilliant tone, and that the young pianist seemed more at home when playing on the Ployel. The difference in place must also be remembered the saloon being par excellence the musical salon of the Exhibition. The instrument was used at the Melbourne Leidertafel on Monday, and excited general admiration. Messrs. W. H. Glen and Co. are Bluthner's agents in Melbourne, and they are determined to push the trade. Bluthner displays a cottage, which is a marvel of workmanship for the frame, carving in walnut Gothic Renaissance.

Schwechten, G., of Berlin, not represented in Sydney, exhibits one of his well-known sterling instruments; Kaps, of Dresden, who withdrew from competition in Sydney sends one in the old German style. Bechstein is absent, so are Carl Ronisch, Hartmann, Manthey, Franz Seiler, Neumayer, Adam and Wagner. Against the defections there are several new exhibitors, Dassell, Gerhardt, Kuhla, Pfaffe, Quandt, Schmidt, and Inarge, of Berlin; Eckermann and Co., and Ruppach, of Hamburgh; Gerstenberger and Edward Seiler, Leignitz; Knacke, Brothers, Munster; Lindner and Soha, Stralsoun; Schake, Hanover; Mayer and Co., Haslwanter, and Tiefenbrunner, Munich; K. Scheel, Cassell; Frau, Heidelberg; Vogelin, Karlsruhe; Zeitter of Braunschweig; and Gebauher of Konigsberg. The other exhibitors contributed to the Sydney collection, and their instruments were noticed at length in connection therewith. The number of instruments is smaller, but the variety greater, and but for the absence of Schwechten the quality on the whole is, I think, better.

AMUSEMENTS.

CIVIL SERVICE MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The above society give their conductor, Signor Giorza, a benefit this evening, at the Masonic Hall, when the International Exhibition Cantata will be repeated. This very melodious composition has never yet been heard to advantage. It was produced twice in the Exhibition-building, but not under favourable circumstances, owing to the size and defective acoustic properties of the building, and to the want of seating accommodation for the crowds who attended the performances. The shuffling of thousands of feet was not a pleasing accompaniment to the music, and its beauties were by these means sometimes wholly lost to the ear. Judging from the rehearsal on Tuesday night, the concert promises to be a very successful one.

MELBOURNE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION RIFLE MATCH.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—A letter on the above subject, from a person styling himself, "A member of the N. S. W. R. A.," having appeared in last Friday's issue of your paper, and up to the present not having been replied to, I crave permission to do so. In the first place, the person who wrote the letter is not a member of the association. The council has not lost sight of its first object, as it thinks that object can be better attained by encouraging shooting at home than by sending a team to Melbourne, as that has nothing whatever to do with "giving permanence to Volunteer corps." The council is not desirous of fostering dissension between intercolonial associations, as can be proved by correspondence in its possession. The council did not reply to the Victorian Association's invitation by impertinent criticism, as was the case when an invitation was sent to Victoria last year. The council has not been working with "friction" such as your correspondent describes, as for years past there has not been a serious difference of opinion on any matter brought before it. All your correspondent's remarks regarding the old and new Volunteers are entirely beside the subject, and under the circumstances uncalled for; and all the special pleading and fine writing, indulged in by your correspondent—for which, by the by, he is remarkable—do not remove the fact that the team he is fostering is not and cannot be regarded as a representative of this colony's skill in rifle-shooting, and will be quite unworthy of that distinction; but to attempt to reply categorically to this letter—bristling as it does with false premises and misstatements—would take up more time and space than is available for the purpose, and I will conclude by merely regretting that persons occupying the position of officers can be found who will speak and vote in the council against sending a team and then turn round and take part in this affair, perhaps under pressure.

AUSTRALIAN WOOL IN THE AMERICAN MARKET.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—With reference to the paragraph in your commercial article to-day, calling attention to the shipment of 291 bales wool from Melbourne to this port, we have to explain that this wool forms part of a shipment from Melbourne for conveyance by San Francisco mail steamers to San Francisco, and thence through to Boston and New York by rail or steamer.

These shipments are induced by the very low rates of freight offered by the mail steamers, and are, we believe, but the commencement of a very large business.

We have no doubt that the public of these colonies will be pleased to learn that the liberal terms now open for the shipment of wool hence to America, is likely to result in the opening of such an advantageous market. We are, &c.,

November 17.

Mrs. Charles Kean.—Mr. E. L. Blanchard gives an interesting reminiscence which the death of Mrs. Charles Kean recalls to his memory:—"It so happens that I have a boyish remembrance of being present when, as Miss Ellen Tree, this accomplished actress made her first appearance at Covent Garden Theatre, on Wednesday, May 21, 1823, as Olivia in 'Twelfth Night.' As my father played Sir Andrew Aguecheek on that occasion, I was permitted to go behind the scenes at the conclusion of the comedy, in order to be consigned to his paternal care, and I can dimly recall the young actress, then scarcely seventeen, being congratulated in the green-room by the elder Farren, Fawcett, and Bartley, who had acted Malvolio, the Clown, and Sir Toby Belch, while Mrs. Gibbs, then regarded as the wife of the popular dramatist, George Colman the younger, and who had represented Maria with bewitching piquancy, peeped in at the door on her way to the dressing-room to laughingly shout forth a prediction of the bushels of histrionic fruit likely to be gathered from that Tree. The night had been identified with the benefit of Miss Maria Tree, her sister, who had embodied Viola, and who had on seven nights previously, as the heroine of Howard Payne's adapted drama of 'Clari, or the Maid of Milan,' sung 'Home, Sweet Home," so deliciously that the town was already echoing with the strains of the melody destined afterwards to become so popular. The opera of the 'Marriage of Figaro' was the afterpiece, with Miss Paton as the Countess Almaviva; the charming songstress, Miss Love, as Barbarina; Miss M. Tree as Susanna, appending to the pretty French song of 'Rose d'Amour' a castanet dance, then quite a novelty; and 'Gentleman' Jones, the most polished of light comedians, the Count Almaviva. To say nothing of the Fiorello, played by Pyne, the father of Miss Louisa Pyne; Fawsitt, the Antonio; Pearman, the Figaro; and John Isaacs, father of Rebecca Isaacs, the Bazil, the cast might justify the lamentation of old playgoing fogeys that nothing like it is to be seen nowadays; but it should also be remembered that the Convent Garden company included at the same time Macready, Charles Kemble, Miss Foote, Miss Chester, Madame Vestris, Keeley, and Frederick Yates, while the Easter piece produced that year under the title of 'The Vision of the Sun' was one of the most brilliant spectacles the stage has ever seen. The half-price playgoer at this season, who could see nearly three acts of a Shakespearean play, supported by the admirable performers just mentioned, with such a grand 'show' piece afterwards, had certainly not a bad time of it."

Exposing Infants to Infection.—At a recent meeting of the Orrell Local Board, near Wigan, in Lancashire, the clerk, in illustration of the difficulties which beset the control of infection, mentioned a practice which exists in the district, of mothers deliberately exposing their young children to the infection of scarlet fever and whooping-cough, under the belief that it was better that the children should have the disease while young. He designated the belief as a "superstition." We would rather term it a tradition, arising from the imperfectly understood results of experience. The practice described is by no means confined to the part of Lancashire under consideration. Our own knowledge of it is somewhat extensive, but the exposure, so far as we have met with it, has been invariably limited to the obviously mild cases of infectious disease, and two elements entered into the practice. First, there was the practically universal belief that the infectious diseases of children had to be undergone by every child, and the sooner they were got over the better for the child, both as to its chance of recovery and its subsequent welfare; and next there was the belief that if a child contracted the disease from a mild case, it would have a mild attack, hence mild cases were selected to catch the disease from. In both these elements there was a substratum of truth, which long experience and common observation had shown, and which was unchecked by the more precise observation of the medical men.—Lancet.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

[BY ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.]

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

NEWCASTLE.

Wednesday.

An inquest was held on the body of the little girl, Margaretta Louden, to-day, and a verdict of accidental death returned. The jury thought the Government should make better provision for protecting persons, especially school children, who have to use the crossing at Wickham.

GUNNEDAH.

Wednesday.

The Quirindi bank robbers have been each sentenced to 12 years' imprisonment, with hard labour.

GRAFTON.

Wednesday.

Yesterday a son of Mr. Pegus, a Custom-house officer at Clarence Heads, while playing with a pistol, shot himself in the neck, and died soon after.

The news of Trickett's defeat by Hanlan caused great excitement here.

WILCANNIA.

Wednesday.

Last night the large store occupied by Messrs. Cramsie, Bowden, and Company narrowly escaped total destruction by fire. The townspeople turned out en masse, rendered valuable assistance, and saved the premises. The damage done is to the extent of about £2000, which is covered by insurance.

The Darling River is rising. Six steamers have discharged general cargoes during the past fortnight.

TEMORA.

The Treasurer has stated that the Government had approved of Mr. James's plans for water supply for domestic purposes, and were negotiating for the purchase of an engine. Water will be laid on in two months if pipes are procurable in the colony; otherwise, it will take four months.

Murray's prospecting claim have come upon very rich washdirt. A trial of two flour-bags full, gave 6 oz. 11 dwts. One ton of stone from the rich quartz prospecting claim was forwarded for Mint assay this morning. Arrangements for floating this claim are almost completed.

QUEENSLAND.

BRISBANE, Wednesday.

The Assembly was engaged all the evening discussing the appointment of a Commissioner to proceed to England, to inquire into the matters contained in Hemmant's petition. The Government propose to send one from the colony, namely Mr. George King, and asks the Colonial Office to appoint the other. The Opposition maintained that the Commission ought to consist of three, and suggested the appointment of two in the colony. It was afterwards proposed that the colony should appoint one, and the Colonial Office the other two. But the Government refused to accept any amendment, and after a long debate, and much unpleasantness, the Government proposal was at length carried. The House is now proceeding with the Appropriation Bill.

The Menmuir left Cooktown on Monday night for Hongkong, taking a number of Chinese diggers for Port Darwin.

The new quartz reef discovered at Maytown promises to be very rich.

In the libel action brought by Gresley Lukin against the publishers of the Australian Catholic News, the jury found the libel to be defamatory, malicious, and totally devoid of truth; further, that the apology published was no mitigation, and that an article which was published a fortnight after the libel was an aggravation of the original offence. The damages awarded were £800.

A Chinaman was brutally murdered by one of his countrymen at Townsville last night. The victim was stabbed in several places. Another Chinaman was drowned in Ross Creek to-day.

Municipal affairs at Townsville have come to a deadlock, and much public indignation exists in consequence.

VICTORIA.

MELBOURNE, Wednesday.

In the Assembly, to-day, Professor Pearson made a personal explanation with reference to an article in the Argus regarding his action as a member of the Elections Committee. Mr. Murray Smith also spoke on the subject, and after the article had been read by the Clerk, the subject was allowed to drop. The Minister of Mines was asked whether he intended to resign after the promise he gave to his constituents that the railway to Kerang should start from Eaglehawk. He denied that he ever gave such a promise, or staked his seat on it. Upon the conclusion of the private members' business the House went into Committee on the Railway Bill. The lines not previously disposed of were adopted as proposed by the Government. The lines are as follows:—Richmond to Alphington, Kensington to Coburg, Caulfield to Frankston, Wodonga to the Murray, and Ballarat to Ballarat racecourse.

The South Australian cricketers commenced a match to-day against Ballarat, who went to the wickets first, and scored 258 for the first innings. The South Australians, in their first innings, scored 52, with only one wicket down, when time was called.

The Minister of Railways incidentally mentioned to a deputation to-day, that as soon as the Railway Bill passed the Government would be prepared to go on with five or six lines at once.

It has been determined hereafter to carry out the provisions of the Licensing Act as strictly as possible, especially as regards Sunday trading.

J. Stephen, a boarding-house keeper, is charged with harbouring three deserters from the ship Ben Voirlich. The vessel had been cleared, and the three men afterwards shipped in another vessel. The case is remanded.

The Exhibition will be open until 7 o'clock in the evening after Monday next. At a meeting of the Select Committee of the Council to-day, on the Totalisator Bill, several witnesses gave evidences. Most of the witnesses were in favour of giving the instrument a fair trial.

A committee of the Assembly on phylloxera examined M. Boutin as to the various means employed of preventing the disease, and M. Jules Joubert, of Sydney, gave a description of the different phylloxera infesting different plants, together with the appearances.

The Ministerial Reform Bill provides for an establishment of a Council on the basis of the ratepayers' roll, to be elected by 30 single electorates.

It is likely the Land Bill will have to be renewed for another 12 months, as Parliament will be unable to deal with it before the Christmas recess, all the time being occupied by the tax bills relating to the Budget.

Measles have appeared on board the Cotopaxi (s.). A Frenchwoman and three children, who are unable to speak a word of English, were found suffering. They were taken off, and will remain here until they are convalescent. Their cabins have been fumigated. There were also measles aboard of the Lusitania (s.), but the vessel was not detained in quarantine.

A gentleman has given £1200 for the completion of one of the chapels at St. Patrick's Cathedral. The donor's name has not been made known.

The English mails were forwarded to Sydney this morning. The Queensland portion is unusually heavy.

The Worthy Grand Lodge of Australasia Independent Order of Good Templars met in session (second) on Tuesday, at the Temperance Hall. The whole of the grand lodges under its jurisdiction, with the exception of Western Australia, were fully represented. The representatives from New South Wales were the Rev. W. Bradley and Messrs. W. B. James and A. M. Davis. Some very important correspondence was read from the committee appointed by the R.W.G.L. on W. G. Lodges, conceding all that has been asked. The following are the names of the new executive:—W. G. T., Rev. E. F. Kingdon, Victoria; W. G. C., P. M'Lean, M.L.A., Queensland; W. G. V., W. A. Weymouth, Tasmania; P. W. G. T., W. H. Bennett, New Zealand; W. G. S., H. G. Rudd, Victoria; W. G. Treasurer, F. G. Dunn, Victoria; and W. G. S. I. T., J. T. Smith, New Zealand. A very important amendment in the Grand Lodge Constitution was effected, giving privileges to seafaring members which they did not hitherto possess. After a large amount of business had been got through, the session was brought to a close this evening.

The Presbyterian Assembly was occupied to-day in hearing a dispute in which the Rev. Dr. Gilchrist was concerned, in reference to the percentages on the sale of Church property. The Assembly decided against Dr. Gilchrist, who intimated his intention to give up the pastoral charge of Hotham. The Rev. T. Bruce, of Auckland, read a paper on confederation of the Presbyterian Churches of Australasia. A letter was read from Mr. Ormond, stating that he would give £5000 towards the erection of a chapel in connection with Ormond College whenever the Church deemed it desirable to build one.

The Victorian Cricket Association entertained the South Australian cricketers at a banquet on Tuesday evening. In proposing the health of the team, the chairman (Mr. D. Wilkie) complimented the team on the plucky manner in which they had played the game, which was a very uphill one. Mr. J. E. Gooden (captain of the South Australian team) proposed the health of the Victorian cricketers. Mr. D. Campbell (captain of the Victorians) responded, and highly complimented Giffen and W. Slight on their fine play in the second innings.

RIFLE CONTEST.

The first of what is hoped will be a series of interesting rifle contests took place on Saturday last between the 1st and 2nd Regiments Volunteer Infantry, resulting in a victory for the former by 28 points. The conditions were 20 men a side, 7 shots each at 500 and 600 yards. Lieutenant D. Fraser made highest score for his side, Sergeant Strong occupying a similar position on behalf of the 1st Regiment. Major Jaques, in calling for three cheers for the victors, trusted to see another match arranged shortly. Captain Farrell, for the 1st Regiment, responded in a brief speech, concluding by calling for three cheers for the losing team. Appended are the scores:—

SYDNEY HOMING PIGEON SOCIETY.

PIGEON FLYING.

The second race in connection with this newly formed and flourishing society took place on Saturday last, from Mount Victoria, distant 77 miles from Sydney. 10 birds competed, and were dispatched by the early train, in charge of Mr. Williamson, one of the members, who kindly tossed the first bird at 10 minutes to 12, and the others at intervals of 10 minutes. The weather was not altogether favourable to rapid time, being rather cloudy. The first to arrive home was Mr. W. Crane's Young Bismarck, which covered the distance in 110 minutes. Mr. King's Waratah was a close second, being 5 minutes behind the winner; and Mr. Hart's Grand Flaneur third in 130 minutes. The remaining birds were all well up. The next race will take place from Richmond on the 4th December.

TRICKETT AND HANLAN.

As showing the extraordinary confidence that was felt as to Trickett winning the late race, we copy the following from the Melbourne Age of Monday:—"Mr. Joseph Thompson, the well-known bookmaker, received a telegram yesterday from London, dated 13th November, 6 p.m., from his brother, Mr. John Thompson, who went home recently for the purpose of acting as Trickett's agent. The telegram received is to the effect that Trickett, who rows Hanlan to-day, was never in such splendid condition as he is in now, and that he feels very sanguine that he can beat his opponent. So satisfied is Mr. John Thompson about Trickett's form that he has put a large sum of money on him, and in a telegram that he despatched to his brother here three hours later (8 p.m.) he advised him to do the same."

INTERCOLONIAL ELEVEN V. FIFTEEN.

A two days match between an eleven selected from the six-been intercolonial candidates and fifteen players, the majority of whom are "colts," was commenced on Saturday afternoon on the Association Ground, Intercolonial Eleven versus 15 Colts. Powell (University) having won the toss from Nunn (Carlton) decided on going to the wickets, and with Teece opened the innings to the bowling of Eaton and Nunn. After scoring two singles Teece was clean bowled in Eaton's second over (1-2-2), and made way for Pope; who put nine together, and then fell a victim to the same bowler. 2-9-14. Iceton joined Powell and increased the total to 33, when the latter was bowled by Nunn, after a good innings for 15. Sly followed and seven more runs were added, when Iceton was given out leg before wicket to Nunn. 4-5-40. Barff was bowled with the next ball, and Roberts opposed the third ball of Nunn's next over up between the wickets and was caught by Maloney. The board showed 6-0-40 when Metcalfe joined Sly, and matters looked rather gloomy for the "Varsity," but the pair made a good stand, and compelled the Carlton captain to change the bowling, Magovney and Briscoe going on in place of Eaton and Nunn. This change proved successful, both batsmen being dismissed with the score at 70. Metcalfe showed good defence for his 10 runs; and Sly played an excellent innings for 26. The remaining batsmen added only two, and the innings closed for a total of 72. The wickets having been rolled, the Carltons commenced their innings at half-past 4, and when time was called they had reached the University total, with the loss of 8 wickets, M'Crea, Tooher, and Callachor being the principal contributors, with 17, 17, and 14 not out, made by good cricket. The game will be continued next Saturday. Appended are the scores:—

SAMOA.

We take the following intelligence from the Samoan Times to the 16th October:—A settler, who arrived from Savaii during the latter part of the week, has kindly furnished us with the following information concerning the native war now being carried on upon that island:—On Friday, October 8, the King Party took three forts from the Old Party, during which the latter lost twelve killed and a large number wounded, some of whom have since died. One of the killed was a woman. The King's forces had six killed and several wounded. A report that Tuala had been one of the killed on the King's side has proved to be false. On Sunday the Safotulafai people occupied the bush and roads in order to surround the Old Party and prevent them from going to the Salailur district. The King endeavoured to make peace negotiations, but the opposition would not receive his overtures. In consequence of this, both parties are determined to fight to the bitter end. It had been rumoured that the Itu-o-Tane people—supports of the Old Party—were coming round in thirty canoes, as also a large land force, to take Amoa, but up to the time our informant left they had not put in an appearance. The Amoa people feel confident of being able to fight their own battle against the Itu-o-Tane if they do show up.

The Times gives the following respecting a native battle near Palauli:—Information reached town on Tuesday that the contending factions on Savaii had come into collision near Palauli, and that both sides had several men killed and wounded. It will be remembered by our readers that after the burning of Palauli by the King's followers, on the 4th August last, the Savaii contingent of the Old Party proceeded to Fua, on the south-west side of the island, and there encamped. It is now evident from the fact of an engagement having taken place near Palauli that Malietoa's opponents have in the interval recovered the ground which they lost in August, and from intelligence which we have received it would appear that the cause of the King is again on the wane at Savaii. Turning to the state of parties on this island—Aana is almost deserted, the bulk of the people having gone to Atua. This latter district is in a state of expectancy, and waiting to have a blow at the Tuamasaga.

The total value of exports from Apia to San Francisco since the beginning of 1875 to October 1, 1880, is 75,628 dollars 74 cents, and of imports 334,051 dollars 70 cents, which shows a balance in favour of the San Francisco market of 258,432 dollars 96 cents. Since the arrival of Consul Dawson, two years ago, the imports from San Francisco have been 148,096 dollars 66 cents, against 185,955 dollars 4 cents for the three years and eight months previous to his coming, and the monthly average has been 6044 dollars 76 cents, against 4226 dollars 47 cents, showing an average monthly increase of 1818 dollars 29 cents for the past two years over the three years and eight months previous.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS.—Mr. H. Brookes, in a letter to the Daily News, urges the necessity for a modification of the powers of the House of Lords. After remarking on the hindrance to legislation occasionally created by the action of the Lords, he continues:—It is argued on behalf of the House of Lords that in acting thus they are acting within their legal right—that the Constitution gives them the power, and that they are entitled thus to exercise it. I take leave to question this. The spirit and essence of the British Constitution is the government of the people by the people, through their representatives in Parliament, in accordance with the hereditary right of the Crown to veto their bills, and the hereditary right of the Peers to concur or not to concur in them. With regard to all bills relating to the taxation of the people the Lords have never been permitted to meddle, and could only concur in and pass them without alteration or amendment. But the Lords claim to exercise, and have exercised, an absolute right to reject any other bills of the Commons not relating to taxation. That claim, though it may be in accord with the letter of the Constitution as that has now come to be read and understood, is not in harmony with its spirit, or consistent or compatible with the constitutional rights of the Crown and the Commons. . . . . The right of the Commons to legislate arose out of the necessities of the monarch to obtain money and levy taxes upon the people to maintain his Government and defray the costs of his wars. When the monarch asked his people for money, the people's representatives presented petitions for the redress of their grievances; and these petitions, being acquiesced in, were converted into statutes or Acts of Parliament. The right of the Peers to participate in the legislation of the Crown and Commons seems to have been limited to the right or privilege of giving counsel and advice to the monarch. Previous to the present structure and constitution of our Parliaments, which dates from the thirteenth century, the House of Lords, as a House of Lords, did not exist. The Barons existed, but they had no House or Chamber of their own, and the barons, bishops, and commoners who constituted the Parliament, all assembled together in one chamber, and it may be presumed that all the questions and matters discussed therein were carried or rejected by a majority of the votes of the whole assembly. But for some reason, and history does not tell us for what reason, the Commons desired to have a separate chamber to themselves and they obtained it. The Lords were, therefore, obliged to assemble in a chamber of their own. And for some time longer the Commons went on legislating, and the Lords, spiritual and temporal, went on concurring and not concurring, and advising their Sovereign accordingly. And in this way the Peers managed to thrust themselves, in their new House, between the monarch and his people, and to assume the right to reject where they did not concur. But there is no mention of peers voting by proxy, or of peers rejecting, year after year, bills or statutes proposed by the Commons. Their right or privilege was to advise the Crown as to the measures proposed by the Commons, and in the process of time this became converted into a right to reject any bill in which they did not concur.

LANDLORDS AND TENANTS IN IRELAND.—Lord Dunraven replies, in the Times, to an argument contained in a letter from Mr. O'Donnell, who spoke of "the folly of vicariously punishing a Government for the anti-tenant views of the Conservative Opposition in the Upper House." "I presume," he says, "that Mr. O'Donnell intended to include all those who voted against the Compensation for Disturbance Bill, whether Liberals or Tories; and if so, I, as one of those Liberals who voted against the bill, strongly object to its being supposed that I have anti-tenant views." Lord Dunraven protests against the notion that the views on tenant-right of those who voted for or against the bill were necessarily indicated by their votes. "As far as I am concerned, I should have voted against the bill whatever my views might be about the government of Ireland and the relationship that should exist between landlord and tenant. Take the strongest case, and suppose I was in favour of Home Rule in its extremest form, of the establishment of peasant proprietors by compulsory means, of fixity of tenure, and the settlement of rents by some arbitrary power, and of all the other heroic remedies for Ireland's ailments. I should still have voted against the bill; because, first, to annul existing contracts and to suspend the operation of the law for the recovery of debt in favour of one class and against another is a thing that never ought to be done and never has been done by anybody anywhere; second, because I object to educating people in deceit, and if in a country where many believe, and all are constantly hearing, that to pay rent is unnecessary, not to say immoral, a Government informs the people that the amount they have to pay depends entirely upon their ability to show to the satisfaction of a court that they are unable to pay in such a case, you offer a strong inducement to those people to tell lies: third, because the bill would have benefited money-lenders and not the small tenant farmers who are in great distress; fourth, because capital would have been frightened out of the country; and fifth, because it is bad political economy to compel one class to bear all the burden of assisting another when both are suffering from the same distress."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD LIVER OIL.—ITS UNEQUALLED EFFICACY IN CONSUMPTION AND WASTING DISEASES.—Dr. Hardwicke, Coroner for Central Middlesex, writes:—"I have great pleasure in adding my testimony to the already well-recognised virtues of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil, having prescribed it many years, and being satisfied that it is a pure oil, very palatable, and more easily digested than the pale oils. It possesses medicinal properties which also render it more efficacious than other kinds of fatty oils. In the class of tubercular diseases, including consumption, so prevalent in our great centres of population, the use of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is attended with manifold advantages; and I know of no therapeutic agent which, in connection with judicious sanitary measures, is better calculated to stay the ravages of these great consuming plagues of the British Islands. The iodine, bromine, and phosphorus in Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Oil are undoubtedly efficacious, and being naturally combined with the most easily assimilated fatty substances, make it act both as food and medicine for many invalids who take it periodically with great benefit to health." Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil is sold only in capsuled imperial half-pints, pints, and quarts, by all chemists and druggists. Sole consignees, Ansar, Harford, and Co., 77, Strand, London. LAW REPORT.

SUPREME COURT.—WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 17.

SITTINGS FOR CAUSES.

Banco Court.—(Before his Honor Sir WILLIAM MANNING and a jury of four.)

STUART AND ANOTHER V. BARAYENE.

Jury: Messrs. S. Priestly, J. C. Tucker, N. Fleming, and C. B. Bond.

Mr. M. H. Stephen, Q.C. and Mr. C. B. Stephen, instructed by Messrs. Stephen, Lawrence, and Jaques, appeared for the plaintiffs. Mr. Darley, Q.C., Mr. Davis, and Mr. Pilcher, instructed by Mr. H. R. Way, appeared for the defendant.

This was an action brought by Alexander Stuart and Shepherd Smith, to recover damages from James Barayene for trespassing upon the plaintiff's lands, known as the Artarmon Estate, at North Shore, and cutting down fences erected, and trees growing thereon. The plaintiffs claimed £500 and a writ of injunction.

The defendant pleaded—(1), not guilty; (2), the land was not the plaintiffs'; and (3, 4), a justification of the alleged trespasses, as a weekly tenant to one Thomas Broughton, who was the owner in fee.

Though formally this was an action for damages for trespass, it was virtually one of title.

The plaintiff's case was that he had purchased the land in question known as the Artarmon Estate, adjoining and once forming portion of Gore's Estate, North Shore, as a speculation, and after his purchase had the property fenced in, and placed a caretaker in charge. His title deed was as follows:—On the 14th of June, 1851, William Bligh Gore, who was then in possession of the Artarmon Estate, conveyed to John Boyle, who went into possession on the 31st of December, 1860; John Boyle conveyed to Patrick Frechill on the 12th of October, 1874; Patrick Frechill mortgaged to the Bank of New South Wales; Frechill, becoming embarrassed in money matters, sequestrated his estate, and in August, 1876, his official assignee (Sandeman) conveyed the whole of Frechill's interest to the Bank of New South Wales; on the 8th of June the bank ejected Frechill; on the 6th of April, 1877, the bank conveyed to the plaintiff, Alexander Stuart, and in the following year (1878) Stuart conveyed an undivided half to the other plaintiff, Shepherd Smith. In 1877 Stuart fenced in the estate. In 1879, after a lapse of two years, the defendant Barayene cut down a portion of that fence, and claimed to have a right to cut timber over the whole of the estate. In addition to that documentary title, possession was proved in John Boyle since 1851 by nine witnesses living in the neighbourhood, viz., Messrs. John Boyle, Kirby, H. Russell, J. Medlow, R. Archbold, Smith, Bennett, John Doyle, A. Russell, and Charliah.

The defendant's case was that he also had a title by deed to the land in question. His title was as follows:—On the 9th of March, 1846, William Bligh Gore mortgaged to George Green. By endorsement on that mortgage, dated the 16th of June, 1851, George Green transferred that mortgage to Randolph Want. On the 26th of September, 1851, Randolph Want, by a judgment in ejectment, obtained possession from W. B. Gore. On the 9th of September, 1852, Randolph Want conveyed to J. N. Shuttleworth, and on the 16th of June, 1855, Shuttleworth mortgaged the Artarmon Estate (together with other lands) to Thomas Broughton. In February, 1856, Shuttleworth sequestrated his estate, and Broughton bought the whole of his estate from the official assignee. In addition to those deeds the defendant also put in a partition deed executed by the members of the Gore family in 1846, by which portion of the estate, including Artarmon, fell to the lot of William Bligh Gore. The evidence of possession by Broughton was that upon the execution of the mortgage, he went over to the estate, and was shown over the boundaries of Artarmon (and other lands) by W. B. Gore, who was then in possession. He as mortgagee went into possession and appointed W. B. Gore to act as his agent with a liberty to cut timber off the estate, to the exclusion of all others. Gore died in September, 1863. Before that he had been told that Mr. Broughton had purchased the equity of redemption. After Gore's death, Broughton again went over the estate, and appointed Mr. French (nephew to the late Mr. Gore), as his agent, to collect rent (5s. a week), from the defendant Barayene, who was a wood cutter, who had received a license or lease from Broughton, to cut wood off the estate. Barayene paid his rent and cut wood under that lease or license till the commencement of the present action. The documentary title of Mr. Broughton was further deduced from the year 1840. In that year, William Gore (father of W. B. Gore) mortgaged to Messrs. William Pendray and F. W. Pendray. In the same year, William Gore gave a further charge over the same lands to the Messrs. Pendray. In the following year William Gore executed a second mortgage, and a mortgage to secure a further charge on the same lands to Messrs. Pendray. In 1845, F. W. Pendray died. In 1846, letters of administration of the goods of F. W. Pendray were taken out by William Pendray. In 1847, the estate of William Pendray was sequestrated as insolvent, and Clark Irving was appointed official assignee. In 1848, Clark Irving, as such official assignee transferred those several mortgages and further charges to Randolph Want.

Mr. Darley, Q.C., addressed the jury for the defendant, and contended that a clear title had been made out in Mr. Broughton from the year 1846, through W. Bligh Gore, and from 1840 through William Gore. The plaintiff's title, if of any value, dated from 1851 only, and was ulterior in point of time to that of Broughton, the landlord of the defendant; that Broughton had gone into possession at the date of his conveyance in June, 1856, and since the year 1863 had been in the receipt of rent, or a license fee paid weekly, paid by the defendant for the exclusive right of cutting timber on the estate.

Mr. M. H. Stephen, Q.C., replied, and contended that the plaintiffs, even if their title by deed failed, had enjoyed exclusive possession of the land since 1851, and they were consequently entitled to the land by the statute of limitations.

His HONOR summed up the evidence and directed the jury that the title produced, on behalf of Mr. Broughton, was complete, and in law would over-ride that produced by the plaintiffs, as it was earlier in point of time. That being so the question resolved itself into whether the plaintiffs, or those through whom they claimed, had been in definite and exclusive possession of the Artarmon Estate for more than 20 years: if so, they would be entitled by the statute of limitations to succeed. If the possession had not been definite and exclusive the defendant would be entitled to a verdict.

The jury retired at 2.33, and at 2.45 returned a verdict for the defendant.

Jury Court.—(Before his Honor Mr. Justice WINDEYER and a jury of four.)

BUTLER V. HINTON AND OTHERS.

Jury: Messrs. A. Gray, P. Wells, R. F. Philps, and F. Underwood.

Mr. Darley, Q.C., and Mr. E. Barton, instructed by Messrs. Coonan, Ryan, and Dunn, appeared for the plaintiff. Mr. Pilcher, instructed by Mr. S. C. Brown, appeared for the defendants. This was an action brought by Ann Butler to recover damages from John Valentine Hinton, Frederick William Mackey, and Patrick Murray, for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house at Cobar, and ejecting the plaintiff and her stock-in-trade as a publican, and furniture. In a second count the plaintiff laid her claim in trespass; in a third count, in trover. £1000 was claimed. The defendants pleaded:—1. Not guilty. 2. The house was not the plaintiff's. 3. The goods and chattels were not the plaintiff's. The plaintiff's case was that she had been in the public-house line for the last twenty-two years, for the last fifteen years of which she had been carrying on business herself (her husband having died) for the maintenance and livelihood of her family, consisting of six children. At the end of last year she, with her family, went to Cobar to carry on the business of a hotelkeeper. On the 16th of December a special bailiff in the suit of Nelson, Brothers, v. Walden made a seizure at the suit of Messrs. Nelson, Brothers, who had signed judgment for default of appearance for £630 11s. 5d. of an hotel at Cobar, known as the Royal Hotel. At that sale the plaintiff purchased some of the stock and a few small articles of furniture. On the 26th of January following, the bailiff sold the remainder of the furniture, &c. The plaintiff became the purchaser of the unexpired portion of the license, and of the fixtures, shelving, &c., and received possession of the house, where she at once commenced a brisk business over the bar, with stock obtained from a storekeeper at Cobar. On the 28th of January, the defendant Murray, who with the other defendants carried on business as storekeepers at Bourke, arrived at Cobar, and at once, in company with another man, proceeded to take an inventory of all the plaintiff's furniture and stock, and laid claim to the house, and threatened to eject the plaintiff unless she paid the debt due by Walden, amounting to about £640. The plaintiff declined to pay any sum, as she had purchased the house from the Sheriff, and refused to recognize the defendants in the matter. Murray thereupon took steps to sell the whole of the premises, and after putting up a notice, the bell-man was sent round the town advertising that the sale would be the following day. The plaintiff continued selling until after the property was put up for sale. As no bona-fide bid of sufficient amount was made, the property was bought in for the firm. Murray, the same afternoon, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Walden, returned to the Royal Hotel, and removed the whole of the plaintiff's furniture and stock into the public street. Some articles of furniture suffered injury and portion of the stock was destroyed. The plaintiff was unable to obtain other suitable premises at Cobar, and could not start an hotel. The stock she had obtained was sold at a sacrifice. She estimated her loss at £1000. Her story was corroborated by her daughters, and also by the special bailiff, from whom she had purchased. The defendant's case was that the Cobar Company, who had a promise of a grant from the Crown of a portion of land at Cobar, contracted to sell a parcel of that land to a person named Parker; Parker agreed to sell to Walden, who upon it put up a house, in which he intended to carry on an hotel. For that purpose he obtained goods from the defendants, to secure payment for which he gave a document to the defendants agreeing to execute a mortgage of the premises to them when he had obtained a grant from the Crown, and when such mortgage was demanded, if he then owed the defendants any amount for goods supplied. Further goods were supplied by the defendants, to the amount of between £700 and £800. To secure payment of any amount up to £1000, Walden thought he executed a bill of sale to the defendants; and under the provisions of that bill of sale the defendant Murray was acting when he ejected the plaintiff. In removing the goods no more force was used than was necessary, and no personal violence was offered to the plaintiff or her family. When goods were supplied to Walden, the defendants were cognisant of the debt he owed to Nelson, Brothers.

Mr. Pilcher at length addressed the jury for the defendants.

Mr. Darley, Q.C., replied.

His HONOR ruled that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict if she was in possession of the hotel when the defendant Murray came there, and, in company with Walden, removed the furniture, &c., and ejected the plaintiff. If they found for the plaintiff she would be entitled to reasonable damages, as the defendant, Murray, had taken the law into his own hands, and had acted altogether in an illegal manner.

The jury, after retiring for ten minutes, returned a verdict for the plaintiff, with damages £350, and specially found that defendant Murray was acting on behalf of the firm—Messrs. Hinton, Mackay, and Murray.

POLICE.

CENTRAL POLICE COURT.

The Bench, yesterday, was composed of Messrs. Guy, Booth, and Henderson; and on the summons side by Messrs. Chapman, Carpenter, M'Beath, Cook, and Palser.

Of the eighteen defendants fined for drunkards, two were further convicted of using obscene language, on which ground they were further sentenced to pay 40s. each.

Anne Burns, charged with having stolen an antimacassar, valued at 4s., the property of Honora Richardson, pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to be imprisoned one month.

On the summons side, Aaron Loveridge and William Dunne were found guilty, on the prosecution of Reginald Hansard, for removing sand from land the property of Sir Daniel Cooper, and were severally ordered to pay 20s. damages.

James Smith was fined 40s. for assaulting Thomas Henry Browne. Patrick Ryan was fined 10s. for a breach of the municipal by-law of Alexandria, prohibiting riding on footpaths. Charles Porter was fined 5s. for using insulting language, calculated to provoke John L. Hordern to a breach of the peace. In Hewitt v. Hewitt, maintenance, an order was made for payment of 25s. a week; and in Brissett v. Walker, affiliation, an order for 7s. 6d. a week was taken by consent.

WATER POLICE COURT.

Messrs. Marsh (W.P.M.), Jenkins, Edwards, and Boyce presided in the Charge Court, yesterday, and the bench in the Summons Court was occupied by Mr. Senior.

Several cases against drunkards and disorderly characters were disposed of.

Nelly Chapman, Ada Chapman, and Mary Walker, three unfortunate children under the age of 16 years, who have been repeatedly under the observation of the police as wanderers about the streets in dissolute company, were all sent to the Reformatory schools, Biloela.

Sub-inspectors Waters and Johnston secured convictions against a number of offenders for various breaches of the Police Act.

William Greig was charged with stealing a marked half-crown in the shop of Mr. William Foy, ironmonger, of George-street. Mr. Godfrey appeared for the defendant. Mr. Foy for some time past has missed money and goods from his warehouse, and on the 8th instant communicated on the subject with Sergeant Higgins. That officer then arranged that a customer, with a view to purchasing some articles, should enter the shop, and present some marked money in payment. Some of the marked money was found in the till, and the 2s. 6d. in the pockets of the defendant. The case was considered proved, and Greig was ordered to be imprisoned for three months.

NEWTOWN POLICE COURT.

Mr. Crane, P.M., presided on the bench yesterday. In the Small Debts division 28 cases were dealt with.

Peter Romey, convicted of leaving a public-house with liquor in his possession, during prohibited hours, on Sunday, was fined 10s. and 5s. 6d. costs, or four days.

THE FRENCH NAVY.—The Saturday Review says:—France is incontestably our principal rival on the seas. After the disasters of the last war, the sums devoted annually to the navy were in large part diverted for the re-formation and armament of that first of French necessities—a great army. But, in spite of this, and in spite of having grievously erred in plastering iron plates upon more or less ancient wooden hulls, and notwithstanding their having too often followed our somewhat meagre initiative, the French can show a very formidable fleet. With them the maintenance of a grand navy is a tradition, and one in which we think it must be admitted there is a strong admixture of ambition. They do not construct a vast marine simply because they once owned great colonies and contested with us the supremacy of ocean. We cannot allow their present colonial possessions to be of importance sufficient to justify the creation of such a fleet as they have in contemplation to possess when their programme is completed. The character of the ships recently launched and in course of building abundantly indicates the designs of their promoters. While the coasts and harbours are being furnished with new land batteries, to be supplemented by floating batteries and torpedoes; and for the battle shock a numerous army of most powerful vessels in the guise of barbette, turret, or battery ships, is in process of development, a perhaps for us yet more dangerous class is forthcoming in the "fighting cruiser." Of such the Magon just launched is a type. She is one of ten recently built, and which correspond pretty closely with our "C" corvettes, being, however, of greater tonnage and spreading more canvas. These cruisers are unarmoured, and are designed with three special ideas—to be rapid goers to carry a large quantity of coal, and to be able to economize fuel by utilising their large sail-power. Their armament varies from twelve to twenty-one guns of different calibres, and their speed, taking the average, is about sixteen knots. In addition to these ten there are eight-and-twenty other cruisers, most of which have highly respectable qualities of speed, capacity, and armament. Altogether the French have, afloat or building, one iron and steel barbette ship; two steel barbette ships; four iron and steel battery ships; four smaller barbette ships; seven iron and steel turret ships; three iron and steel smaller turret vessels; two iron broadside ships; one iron monitor; seven iron small floating batteries; six battery ships (wooden hulls armoured); eleven smaller of the same class, having good speed; ten broadside vessels (wooden hulls armoured); five "special" ships, armoured, and probably capable of taking their place in line of battle, thirty-eight cruisers; and twelve gun vessels. This list, already striking enough, is intended to become eventually much more formidable. "The soul of a good defence," wrote the late Major Charles Adams, "lies in well-judged offence"; and certainly the navy of France seems to have been constructed with the design on occasion of illustrating the force of this axiom.

EXPERIENCE has shown the wisdom of persons with small means, as well as the capitalist and investor, purchasing good suburban land—without exception the best land to be bought now is at Marrickville, Ashfield Heights, one of the original and large freeholds, surrounded by well-made and wide streets, and with grounds well planted and cultivated—easily reached from Summer Hill or Ashfield Station, and with the prospective advantage of tramcars. The properties surrounding Marrickville are large and valuable, and the lots comparable with English meadows. Get titho. and inspect. Torrens' Title. The sale will be without reserve, on the ground, at 3 p.m., Saturday, 27th November. Hardie and Gorman, auctioneers.—ADVT.

PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

EAST SYDNEY ELECTORATE.

DECLARATION OF THE POLL.

The election for East Sydney—the first contest in the present series of elections—naturally excited a large amount of interest yesterday, and although there was no political cry for the electors to rally around, still there was a good field of candidates from which to choose, and as each one had a large working committee, and a number of friends, there was a tolerable amount of excitement attendant on the event. The poll opened at 8 o'clock, and very soon after that hour the electors began to surround the polling booths. There were not so many vehicles as usual engaged in bringing the voters to the poll, but it seemed as if a far large number than usual had determined to record their votes, and the poll-clerks were kept busily employed all through the day. It is thought that on no former occasion were there so many votes recorded before 12 o'clock, and about 1 p.m. there was a perfect rush to the booths. The poll closed at 4 p.m. precisely, and then the arduous task of counting and scrutinizing the votes had to be performed. This occupied nearly two hours, during which time a large crowd of electors, probably ten or twelve thousand, had gathered in front of the hustings. The meeting was very orderly and quiet—indeed it may be doubted whether any previous election in Sydney has ever passed off in a more peaceable manner. The formal portion of the proceedings was commenced by the RETURNING-OFFICER (Mr. W. Day), who came to the front of the hustings and announced the result of the poll as follows:—

Reid	3413
Renwick	3295
Dangar	3102
Parkes	2770
Roberts	2295
Lees	1385
Moore	1216
Josephson	507

He, therefore, declared George Houston Reid, Arthur Renwick, Henry Cary Dangar, and Sir Henry Parkes to be duly elected to represent the constituency of East Sydney in the Parliament of New South Wales. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. G. H. REID then came forward, and was received with enthusiastic applause. He said it had now become his duty to return his sincere thanks to his supporters for having elected him as one of the representatives of East Sydney in the new Parliament. He felt that it was almost melancholy to be too successful, because the higher they placed him, the more likely he was to come down. (Laughter, and "No, no.") But he felt that he had been elected because so large a number of them considered that he was likely to prove a useful member of the Assembly. (Cheers.) A very solemn obligation had been placed upon him, in endeavouring, to the highest degree of his ability, to justify their generous confidence. (Cheers.) He must tell them frankly that he felt almost ashamed to have been placed above one who was so old and so distinguished a public man in the political life of this country. (Uproar.) But it would be very ungracious of him not to return his heartfelt thanks to every individual who on that occasion had showed his confidence in his ability to be of some service to the colony of New South Wales. (Cheers.) He was rejoiced to believe that he had reached the position in which they had placed him, not because he had won the confidence of any particular class or section of the community, but because he had secured the confidence of every class. (Loud cheers.) He also desired to return his grateful thanks to those to whom he felt in a great measure his victory was to be attributed. He had been served by some of the most zealous volunteers who had ever appeared in the arena of political strife. ("Do you want a billet?] He had just left one, and a very good one it was. (Laughter and cheers.) He again thanked them for the position in which they had placed him on the poll. (Loud cheers.)

Dr. RENWICK, who was also loudly cheered on coming forward, said that at the last election for East Sydney they placed him in a most honourable position. At that time the citizens had under consideration one of the most important questions, as regards the liberty of the subject, that could affect any community, and on that occasion, by the unmistakable vote they gave, they decided that this country should be a free country. (Cheers.) Now, he appeared before them that day as a successful man under somewhat altered circumstances. He was placed in the position in which he stood by the free votes of his fellow-citizens. (Cheers.) He had seen the results of the poll in regard to each polling booth, and he found that every class, every creed, and every portion of the community had voted for him on the present occasion. He considered that the large number of votes recorded in his favour showed conclusively to every right-thinking mind that Dr. Renwick had served his country—(cheers)—and he took it as a splendid augury for the future that his services would be again appreciated by them if he continued in the straightforward and honourable career which he had pursued during the short period he had been in Parliament. He had already addressed them in regard to the views he held on the various political questions of the day; and it was his intention in the Assembly not to swerve one jot from the course he had already marked out for himself. In the future, it should be his endeavour to do as much as he could for this great city, and it would be his constant desire to make New South Wales, as far as possible, the premier colony. (Hear, hear.) He thanked them for the distinguished honour they had conferred upon him that day. (Cheers.)

Mr. DANGAR said that to say that he was grateful to them conveyed but a faint impression of the sentiments which pervaded his heart on this occasion. It was no small satisfaction to a man, after 23 years of residence among them, to find that he possessed their confidence to the remarkable degree that the ballot-box had disclosed today; and he hoped it was hardly necessary for him to say that in the course of that public life which their votes had opened to him to-day he should make his conscience his best guide, because he thought that in doing that he should never be led astray. (Applause.) He hoped that the confidence reposed in him to-day would not be thrown away. He felt that he ought to render his thanks first to those who had worked so zealously in his behalf, and he assured them he appreciated their efforts; but, if the ballot-box could disclose its secrets, he thought it would be found that he was indebted for his position to that great body which ruled those elections—the working men of Sydney. (Loud applause.) He should make no specious promises to them of what he would do; but he highly appreciated the honour they had done him, and he should never forget that the best way of showing his appreciation of that honour was to act so as to merit the continuation of their approval. (Applause.)

Sir HENRY PARKES, who on coming forward was received with cheering which lasted for some time, said he had no complaint to make. He had rather to congratulate them on the choice they had made of his three colleagues. Wherever they had placed him, they had taken care to elect three friends with him, and he was much more gratified that they should have elected men so eminently filled to represent them than to think about the paltry consideration of where they had placed him. (Cheers and uproar.) To the gentleman who headed the poll he presented his most cordial compliments, and no one could wish him a more honourable career than he wished him. He exchanged, for the generous expression that gentleman indulged in towards him, his most hearty wishes for his success in the Parliament of the country. (Applause.) As for the other gentlemen, he knew he should have their support in the Legislature. And one word more. Seven men now had been elected to the new Assembly, and all those seven were friends. (Uproar.) With regard to where their votes had placed him, that was a matter of trifling consideration. There were influences which were above the power of majorities, and, whatever the result of this election, his position and his influence for good or evil would be left just the same. (Uproar.) When he entered into this contest he was well aware that he had to meet an organized packed body of opponents—(loud cheers)—and he met them manfully—(uproar)—he had met them fearlessly, and he defied them now. (Cheers and uproar.) They had done their best and they had done their worst—(uproar)—and they could not affect him. (Uproar.) If he had seen defeat staring him in the face he should have taken the same course—whoever had trimmed, he had not. He told them plainly what he should do, and he had minced no matter whatever. (Applause.) And with this clear expression of his views, and this challenge to all the adverse sections who had given him a very handsome place on the poll—(uproar)—he thanked them very heartily—not only for his election, but he thanked them for electing the other three men they had elected; and he was quite sure neither they nor he should have any occasion to regret the choice they had made. (Applause.) He thanked those gentlemen who so disinterestedly had worked for him in this election. All he could say was, that if disinterested and fearless service could pay them, he could promise to repay them. His course would be in the future as straight as it had been in the past. (Applause and uproar.) He should turn aside for consideration of nobody, but pursue the same straightforward broad course—doing his duty according to his conscience; and, whatever his opponents might think, he thought that to-day he had achieved one of the greatest victories of his life. (Cheers.)

Mr. C. J. ROBERTS said he appeared before them as an unsuccessful candidate, but he had a very pleasing duty to perform. He had to thank the members of his committee, who had worked hardest their endeavours to raise him to one of the highest positions at the disposal of the people of his native land. (Hear, hear.) He had also to thank those who had voted for him on this eventful occasion of his life. Considering the many claims which the various candidates whom they had chosen had upon the electors, he thought he stood very favourably at the result of the poll. (Cheers.) He was sure no gentleman present would blame him for coming forward as a native of the country to offer his services in the law-making Assembly of New South Wales. Cheers.) He accepted his defeat with that pluck which was characteristic of all native-born Australians. (Cheers.) He thanked them from the bottom of his heart.

Mr. S. E. LEES said he accepted his defeat with as good a grace as he did on a previous occasion, and then when he subsequently appeared as a candidate he was returned. He thought he was in an honourable position that night, having on his first appearance polled 1385 votes in the face of opponents who were the cream of the political ability of this city, and to come within two of so great a statesman as the gentleman who was returned was a compliment which he accepted with great pleasure. He returned thanks to his voluntary committee, and to the 1385 electors who had voted for him, and he wished the balance every success and every privilege that could attend upon their choice. (Cheers.)

Mr. CHARLES MOORE said he appeared before them as one of the defeated ones, and he did not think they had paid him for all the trouble he had taken for them. But their verdict would not deter him from coming before them on another occasion. He thanked those gentlemen who had voted for him, and he should go on doing as he had done before. (Cheers.

Mr. Josephson did not appear.

On the motion of Mr. REID, seconded by Dr. RENWICK, a vote of thanks to the returning-officer was carried by acclamation. Three cheers for the Queen terminated the proceedings.

The following is an analysis of the polling:—

	Roberts.	Renwick.	Moore.	Dangar.	Lees.	Josephson.	Parkes.	Reid.

	2295	3295	1216	3102	1385	507	2770	3413

It will be seen that Mr. Josephson has polled less than one-fourth of the total number of votes recorded for the lowest successful candidate (Sir Henry Parkes), and therefore he is the first to forfeit his deposit of £40 required from each candidate by the present Electoral Act.

After the termination of the proceedings, Mr. G. H. Reid was escorted in triumph to his committee-rooms, at the Oxford Hotel, and, in response to a call from his admirers, he appeared on the balcony of the hotel, and addressed them at some length, thanking them for placing him in the proud position they had done.

WEST SYDNEY ELECTORATE.

MR. CAMERON'S MEETING.

Last night Mr. A. Cameron addressed a large meeting of the electors of West Sydney, at the Masonic Hall, on the various topics agitating the public mind at the present time. Mr. W. Bradley presided, and amongst those on the platform were Sir John Robertson and the Hon. R. Wisdom, M.L.A. The chairman having introduced the candidate,

Mr. CAMERON, who was received with loud applause, said he had been unable to attend all parts of the electorate, and hence he had called that meeting. During the six years that he had been in the House he had not knowingly voted against any principle of his political life, or violated any pledge he had given them. During the last Parliament more work had been done than in any other Parliament since the establishment of responsible government in the colony. The coalition between Sir Henry Parkes and Sir John Robertson had had his fair and consistent support, because it was necessary to sink the personal differences that existed between them in order that they might promote the public weal. He then referred to the work done under that Government, placing at the head of all that glorious measure which had been passed for promoting the public instruction of the young people of the colony. He had long advocated free, secular, and compulsory education, and in times when these principles were extremely unpopular; but now they had them incorporated in the present Act, except that of the education being entirely free. It was however, so nearly free that it was hardly worth talking about. He hoped to see the day when the University of the colony should be free to all—(cheers)—and when they would do away with the fees that now stood in the way of poor struggling ability. (Hear, hear.) He asked them to insist upon a straight answer to the question whether the candidates would revisit any attempt to alter the bill before December 31, 1882. He would not alter one tittle of it except to make it more secular. (Cheers.) With respect to Chinese immigration, he said they would never keep the Chinese out as long as they allowed their wives, for the sake of a half-penny, to deal with them. He referred to his action on the subject during the last session of Parliament, which had resulted in the Government seeking a conference with the Governments of the other colonies upon the subject, and to the position occupied in references to it under the treaties that existed between China and the mother country. The vaunted industry of the Chinese was not that of a free man, but was the industry of the slave. He gave the Government credit for introducing a Bill for imposing a poll tax on them, and preventing more than a certain number of them being brought in any one vessel. He referred to his action during the time he had been in the House in reference to the immigration question. The result of the select committee went to prove the truth of every statement he had made six years ago. In the immigration office in London there was not a single individual who had ever seen New South Wales, or indeed Australia, and yet it was to these people that the people of England were supposed to go for information as to whether or not the colony was suited to their peculiar avocations. (Cheers.) He had no doubt that in the new House they would be enabled to carry a resolution providing that all Government contracts should contain a clause to the effect that eight hours should be a day's labour—(applause)—and it was his intention, as soon as convenient, to give a notice of motion to this effect, so that they might see who were their friends. They would remember that he had moved the adjournment of the House, in order to call the attention of the Government to the fact that vessels were leaving their ports in an unseaworthy state, and the Government had promised immediate inquiry into the matter. Since then, a rotten old hulk that had been lying in Sydney for years had been sent to sea for the benefit of some speculators, and they knew the result. He was convinced that hundreds of vessels were sent away in the same condition, and he was determined—so far as he could—to see that something was done to alter the existing state of affairs. There was another important question to the people of Sydney, and that was the necessity of a new licensing law; the present system was a disgrace to the colony, and he would, therefore, take the power of licensing away from the magistrates altogether. He was much inclined to favour the principle of local option, as it gave the residents the right to say whether they would have a public-house in their midst or not; while on the other side there were many annoyances that the publican was now subjected to that should be altered in any new bill. After referring to the past history of the land legislation, he characterised the application for the remission of interest on the balance owing for land as the most immoral proposition ever made to any community in the world. (Cheers.) During the last session certain propositions had been made by the Treasurer for increasing the revenue, but it now seemed that no additional taxation was necessary; but however this might be he would never be a party to any scheme of taxation that would fetter the commerce of Sydney, which was rapidly being made the entrepot for the commerce of the whole country. (Cheers.) He could assure them, however, that the colonial artisan and manufacturer had nothing to fear from him. He referred to the contracts which had been called for for locomotives to be constructed in the colony, and the action he had taken in the matter was to enable these contracts to be accepted, and under which 70 locomotives were now being constructed in New South Wales. (Cheers.) After a brief tribute to the character of the working men of the colony, he said he would support a law for the inspection of boilers and machinery on shore similar to that in existence for the inspection of similar machinery at sea. Another important matter was that of the extension of the municipal system, and he would be very much in favour of something similar to the Shire Council system of the adjoining colony of Victoria, for they were too apt to fly to the central Government for anything they required. He would be perfectly prepared to give his best attention to this matter. In reference to the question of water supply for the city and suburbs, he said that he thought sufficient data had been supplied by Mr. Gippa to warrant the Government in having a thorough examination of his scheme made. When a report was brought forward he would carefully examine it, and give his vote as seemed best to him for the colony. He did not think any man could be asked to do more who knew nothing of engineering matters. He was thankful to them for their quiet hearing, and he hoped when the poll took place to be one of their members again. He invited the co-operation of all the other candidates to assist in putting down the abominable practice of personation. (Cheers.) If again honoured with their confidence, he would never do anything to disgrace those who had stuck to him and supported him, but would do his best for them, as he had done in the past. (Loud and prolonged applause.)

Mr. A. Kethel moved, and Mr. G. Golding seconded, the usual resolution affirming that Mr. Cameron was a fit and proper person to represent the district in the ensuing Parliament. The motion was supported by Mr. W. M. Alderson.

Sir JOHN ROBERTSON, who was received with loud cheers, said that was not the first time he had stood before the electors of West Sydney. Many times they had sent him into Parliament, and it might be that they might do so again but not this time. In rising to support the affirmation that Mr. Cameron was a gentleman eminently qualified to represent the district he felt great pleasure. Among other things that he had taken an interest in in his long career in the colony had been the helping forward, as far as his means had allowed, the young men of the colony that he had been able to find willing to come forward and of all these in none had he felt more interest than in his friend Mr. Cameron. (Applause.) He was quite sure they would all remember the first night of his election. On that occasion he (Sir John Robertson) had a conversation with him, and advised him as to his future course of action. He had followed that advice, and he had been a success. (Cheers.) He now stood forth as one of their ablest young men, and one who was likely to take a highly prominent position in the State. (Applause.) He had not intended to speak, but the look of a West Sydney assemblage spurred the old war-horse in his blood, and he could not help saying something about the election, and about Mr. Cameron. (Applause.)

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously, and the proceedings terminated with cheers for the Queen.

MR. D. O'CONNOR'S MEETING.

Mr. D. O'CONNOR addressed a large assemblage of electors last evening from the balcony of Pouprrt's Hotel, Parramatta-street. In the course of his address, Mr. O'Connor referred at some length to the statements which Sir Henry Parkes had made at the Masonic Hall the previous evening in reply to Mr. O'Connor's charges against the Premier of having endeavoured to strangle the Education Bill by provoking a quarrel with the Legislative Council upon a verbal amendment in the Stamp Duties Bill. Mr. O'Connor stated that Sir Henry Parkes had said:—"The Council's amendments—the last straw in the consideration of the Education Bill, before being presented for the Royal assent—were considered by the Assembly on the 14th of April—and the Assembly assented to them, and on the 21st of April he brought down a message announcing that the Governor, in the name of her Majesty, had given that the Royal assent to the bill. They would see then that the bill became law on that day. He did not move in the matter of the Stamp Duties Bill until the 20th of May, a month afterwards, that was to say, the bill had been amended in the Council in a way the Assembly did not like, and he and his colleagues refused to proceed with it, and there it stuck for a month after the royal assent had been given to the Public Instruction Act. The way in which the Stamp Duties Bill was dealt with, was by bringing in another bill, and that really meant the movement of the Government in the matter. On the 20th May he moved that a committee be appointed to search the records of the Council to see what had become of the bill that had stuck there. They did not bring in their bill until the 16th June, two months afterwards." That statement of Sir Henry Parkes' did not tell the whole truth. On the 25th of February the Government passed through the Assembly the Education Bill, about a fortnight after the Stamp Duties Bill had passed through the Assembly. Both bills were then before the Legislative Council at the same time. The Council verbally amended the Stamp Duties Bill, and sent it back to the Assembly on the 3rd March. Sir Henry Parkes threw that bill under the table because it contained that amendment, and the following day, the 4th March, he introduced another Stamp Duties Bill, and it was sent up to the Legislative Council. Sir Henry Parkes had said that he "did not move in the matter of the Stamp Duties Bill until the 20th May, a month after the Education Bill had become law." In direct contradiction to that, the records showed that on the 4th March, while the Education Bill was still before the Council, for it did not become law till April, Sir Henry Parkes introduced a second Stamp Duties Bill, having thrown the first one aside, because it had been amended by the Council. Of course, the Council having already passed a Stamp Duties Bill, refused to pass a second. Then commenced the row created by Sir Henry Parkes between the Legislative Assembly and the Council. That disturbance was day after day maintained by Sir Henry Parkes, and on at least one occasion he moved the adjournment of the House for the purpose of calling the attention of the Assembly to the audacity of the Council in amending the Stamp Duties Bill. It was at that juncture that Mr. Greenwood and a number of other members, seeing that Sir Henry Parkes wished to keep up the row with the Council, and thereby jeopardise the passage of the Education Bill, which was still before the Council, went to the Premier and told him that if he did not permit the Education Bill to pass they would go into Opposition, and drive him out of office. Then, and not till then, Sir Henry Parkes permitted the quarrel with the Council to lapse, and the Education Bill was accordingly proceeded with in remarkably quick time—with almost electric speed—and became law. In the meantime the second Stamp Duties Bill had been thrown aside by the Council and there Sir Henry Parkes permitted the matter to rest until the Government was in want of money, and then, in June, he introduced a third Stamp Duties Bill, which afterwards became law. Sir Henry Parkes had charged him (Mr. O'Connor) with having made a most unwarrantable use of Mr. Greenwood's name. The best answer to that was Mr. Greenwood's own letter, in which that gentleman said:—"To the, best of my belief every word you said last night about the Public Instruction Act is true. The Government would have been very glad to keep that question open for the present general election, and it was settled in spite of them, because a large number of members, of whom I was one, had determined to have it settled at all risks." Those were the plain facts of the case; and he left it to the public to judge whether he (Mr. O'Connor) was telling the whole truth, and Sir Henry Parkes telling only half the truth and, thereby seeking to mislead the people. Mr. O'Connor, who was frequently applauded, then proceeded to explain his political views, and the proceedings concluded with a vote of confidence in Mr. O'Connor.

Mr. Buchanan addressed a large meeting of the electors of West Sydney, on Tuesday evening, at Rae's Hotel, Harris-street, Ultimo. Mr. Collins occupied the chair. Mr. Buchanan spoke with energy and ability for over an hour. He was enthusiastically received and applauded. A cordial vote of confidence was passed unanimously, and three cheers given for the candidate. On Wednesday evening Mr. Buchanan addressed a very large assemblage, at Ryley's Hotel, Ultimo. He spoke for an hour and a half, amidst applause. At the conclusion of his speech a vote of confidence was carried by acclamation. At both places large committees were appointed to secure Mr. Buchanan's return.

Mr. Francis Abigail, one of the candidates for West Sydney, held another meeting at Walpole's Hotel, Argyle and George streets, last night. There was a large attendance present, and the candidate on coming forward was most favourably received and listened to with great attention. Mr. I. E. Ives occupied the chair, and in highly eulogistic terms introduced the candidate to the meeting. Mr. Thomas Jessop proposed, and Mr. Richardson seconded, the proposition that Mr. Abigail was a fit and proper person to represent the electorate of West Sydney. A second meeting was held at Blair's Hotel, Margaret and Kent streets, where a large number of electors were waiting the arrival of the candidate. After expressing his views on the several questions—which appeared to meet with the general approbation of the meeting—Mr. Harris proposed, and Messrs. Brainwood and Hunt supported the resolution, that Mr. Abigail was entirely worthy of the confidence of the electors of West Sydney. A vote of thanks to the chairman (Mr. S. Crawford, J.P.), and the usual manifestations, terminated the meeting.

SOUTH SYDNEY ELECTORATE.

Mr. G Withers, one of the candidates for South Sydney, addressed a large meeting of electors at the Star Hotel, Devonshire-street, on Tuesday evening. Mr. Macintosh was voted to the chair, and spoke very strongly in the candidate's favour, stating that Mr. Withers not only was sound on all the leading questions of the day, but he had that peculiar tact and ability of being able to enforce these views on his fellow-men. Another important matter was, he had the time at his disposal, having by his own industry and integrity raised himself to his present position. He hoped every elector present would come up to the poll on next Thursday, and record one of their votes for Mr. Withers. The candidate then came forward, and gave his views on all the important questions of the day, and said he would not only promise to support the many measures he had alluded to, but he would endeavour to have them brought forward and dealt with, as he considered that it was a disgrace that legislation on such important matters had not been proceeded with before. The candidate's address was listened to with the greatest attention, and was received with great approbation. Mr. Riley moved, and Mr. Brown seconded,—"That Mr. G. Withers was a fit and proper person to represent us in the coming Parliament," which was carried unanimously.

REDFERN.

The nomination of candidates for the representation of the electorate of Redfern took place in the Town Hall, Redfern, yesterday. Mr. G. Renwick officiated as Returning-officer, and there were between three and four hundred persons present.

The Returning Officer having announced that he had received the necessary authority for conducting the proceedings,

Mr. F. A. WRIGHT rose and said he felt proud at being present to nominate Mr. John Sutherland. (Cheers.) That gentleman had been so long and favourably known to the electors that he hoped that they would not forget his past services, nor to reward them at the proper time. Mr. Sutherland had represented them for twenty years honestly and faithfully, and had taken an active part in conducting the business of the colony, having been a Minister of several Administrations, and having always advocated the claims of labour. As a Minister, he had displayed great ability and honesty of purpose, and had carried out large and important works to the satisfaction of the country. He was the first Minister who had sanctioned the manufacture of rolling stock in New South Wales, and by doing so had promoted the prosperity of several large manufacturing establishments, such as Hudson, Brothers, and Mort's. Ever remembering the class from which he had sprung, he advocated the eight-hour system, and he was the first to introduce the payment of endowments to municipalities. It was not necessary to enumerate all his public acts; it was sufficient to say that he had given his voice and vote for every important measure calculated to advance the interests of the colony. (Hear, hear.) He had also recognized the fact that no country could be great without skilled labour and wise and honest legislators, and how his long public career had proved so undeniably that he was a wise and honest legislator—while he was still identified with the working men—that he asked them to return him at the head of the poll.

Mr. JOHN GEDDES seconded the nomination.

Mr. W. T. POOLE appeared before them with much pleasure to nominate Mr. R. A. Fremlin. That gentleman could not boast of past political deeds, but he was sure that all who had read his address would admit that he was sound upon the political questions of the day. He felt sure that if they honoured him with their confidence, he would represent them with credit to themselves and to himself. (Cheers.)

Mr. W. STEPHENS seconded the nomination.

Mr. W. FOSKETT nominated Mr. F. Stanley, who, he said, was well known to them all for what he had done in the Municipal Council to improve the borough. The borough, he considered, should feel proud in having such a man to bring forward. Mr. Stanley had held office as Mayor for a long time, and if it were proved that he could serve the borough so well he was sure he would represent them ably in Parliament. But it was not solely on account of his civic capabilities that he stood there to advocate Mr. Stanley's claims for their patronage, although they wanted him to attend as far as possible to the requirements of the borough; it was because he considered that he was capable of giving a fair amount of attention to those of the whole colony. He was in favour of improving botany with a view to making it a second Manly—(hear, hear)—and was in favour of sending the sewage away to sea, and of making recreation grounds for the people to enjoy themselves in. He hoped they would return him at the second place, if not at the head of the poll. (Cheers.)

Mr. W. WILLIAMSON seconded the nomination, and said that Mr. Stanley was sound upon the education question—("Only for a time")—and had, in consequence, not only lost a great deal of the support of those with whom he was connected, but had suffered a good deal of opposition. (Uproar.) He was prepared to prove it. He was opposed to Chinese immigration, and was not exactly a freetrader or a protectionist. (Laughter, and "What is he.") He wanted to protect and increase the industries of the colony by putting a protection on the articles they could manufacture themselves, and the manufacture of which would give the children employment, instead of permitting them to run about the streets like a lot of arabs.

Mr. THOMAS BUCKLAND nominated Mr. P. R. Hogan, and in doing so was received with groans and "boo-hoos." ("How many poor widows houses have you shoved bailiffs into?") From what Mr. Hogan had done in the district in the past—("Time, time")—they would be able to estimate what his future would be. ("He's your nominee.")

Mr. G. R. WHITING seconded the nomination, and said that if Mr. Hogan were elected he would push on their public works, and, instead of advocating increased general taxation, would be favourable to the lands of the squatters being taxed. ("Will he tax Sir Daniel Cooper," and "He's old Buckland's nominee.") He was the nominee of no man, but stood there on his own bottom. ("No.") In consequence of what they knew of him, he felt convinced that they would place him second on the poll.

At this stage a diversion took place on the platform. An elderly individual rose to address those present, when several gentlemen, amongst whom was Mr. Whiting, endeavoured to prevent his doing so. Turning upon Mr. Whiting he made as if he would strike him with a stick he had in his hand, when that gentleman promptly knocked the old man off the platform. Some policemen then interposed their persuasive authority, and the disturber was conducted quietly to his seat again.

Mr. SUTHERLAND said that he would not keep them very long, for his opinions regarding the past and the future were known to most of them who had attended his meetings. ("We don't want them.") It was perhaps necessary for him to state that he considered the moderate of a programme which the Government had issued was a very mesure one; but he was perfectly willing to support anything put forward in it whoever brought it forward. The main feature in it was the proposition to extend municipal institutions throughout the country. Well, in the past he had given evidence that he was favourable to a system of self-government, and he would do so in the future. He would assist the people from the Treasury in a fair and reasonable way as he had done before. (Cheers.) Everything should be done under the law, not under the present system, when members were grasping and supporting Governments simply for what they could get from the Treasury, and entering Parliament to draw as much revenue from the country as they thought proper without considering what was necessary for the general good government. It mattered little to him whether the municipal system were extended or shire councils were established. Three years ago he had a shire council bill before Parliament, and would have passed it had he been permitted. Perhaps it was better that he had not been permitted. The Government said they would stand or fall by free trade. They had no such principle in the country. They had neither free trade nor protection, and they had both. He was in favour of free trade, if it could be given to him; but was a sham to say they were a free trade community when they taxed many raw materials that their manufacturers were consuming. The cry of free trade was only raised to draw attention from other subjects. If putting a tax on coal, cattle, and wool meant free trade, he was one decidedly opposed to it, for nothing could destroy the true interests of the country more than to tax its own products. He could say truly that he would not attempt to go in if it were not to try to prevent such a cruel infliction upon the country. If money were required, there were many other sources from which it might be obtained. (Hear, hear.) It could, for instance, be obtained from realized property—not from that in course of being realized. He was in favour of giving encouragement to the industries of the colonies—(cheers)—but was not one to tax the country to obtain it. He would give it by other means altogether, which would not infringe upon the true principles of free trade. He had already explained what his course had been in regard to this when he had power to encourage industries, and he would be prepared to take the same course again, and, in doing so, he believed he would be only fostering industries until they were able to stand by themselves. There was, for instance, the Liverpool paper-mill, which consumed much of the waste products of the country. The management had obtained a contract with the Government for one year, and they had informed him that if they could get a five-years' contract they would lay out £3000 on appliances, and treble the number of persons they employed. To comply with their request would not cost the country anything. That was the only way in which he would deal with industries; he would give them security until they could compete with the open world. A man who would give opportunities to the foreigner instead of his own people he did not believe would be benefiting his country. The great question of the day appeared to be the education question, which in his opinion was settled. ("For a time.") It would be two years on the 31st of December next when the provisions which had created so much feeling would become law—he meant the withdrawal of State aid from Denominational schools. All that he wanted was that these schools should be permitted to exist so long as they continued under the present laws and regulations—that was, keeping them exactly as they were, as to the education of the same character. He had said that he would do all in his power to make their system purely a national one, but would not do anything to destroy that which was brought into existence under the law. But the Legislature had decided that education shall cease to be given by the State if the building did not belong to State, and he was not going to set up his opinion against the opinions of a majority of the people—(Hear, hear)—and he would maintain the law as it stood until he went before them again. He had done everything in his power to extend the blessings of education to every child in the country, and had been favourable to support being given to the University when the mass were averse to the State endowing it. It was the highest institution in the country, and they should make it worthy of the country, and a national rallying-point for their youth. He wanted to see a national feeling springing from such an institution, and to see prizes given so that children might proceed from the Public schools to the Grammar schools, and from these to the University. That had been his aim in public life, and it was pretty well embodied in the Act before them. The first division of opinion in connection with the Act would be when money was required to replace the schools which were to be done away with by the 28th clause. He feared there would be a great deal of irreligion then. Then would arise the question as to who was to give religious education to the children. Persons could send their own religious teachers to the schools for an hour a day; and there would be a great many divisions that would have fifty children, and he believed John Chinaman would be amongst them, and he would have as much right to send a teacher to the school as any one else. It was not Tyerman or Bright he was afraid of, but men of a lower type. The question would arise whether they would have the Bible taught; and he maintained that in this were found not alone foundations of political and moral law, but the foundation of the most liberal law that human intelligence could devise. When discussion took place on the subject he would take part in it, and if it were to-morrow he would go with the Bible. (Cheers.) Well, he was not going into Parliament as a delegate, but to do the least he could for the people of the whole country. He would go in for extending railways where it could be shown that they would pay, or nearly pay, interest on the capital to be invested in them, or where there was a country which would sustain a large population; and he would be prepared to do all in his power to lock the Darling River down as far as Menindie, believing that if this were done that part of the country could be irrigated, and the river might be made navigable for their produce. He would support the Illawarra railway on certain conditions—that was, if it were connected with the railway system of the colony, and with a line to Botany Heads. He did not think there was any other subject to touch upon. ("Immigration.") Well, Chinese immigration he would entirely oppose; but he would give those of the race already here the protection of the British law. If they were to maintain their British character they could only do so by bringing English people here—people not from the towns of England, but people from the country districts, who would be a benefit to the country districts here. ("Local option?") He would give it to the people if the people desired it; but he feared the teetotallers were going to an extreme in the matter. They seemed to want the whole thing or none. (Laughter.) Regarding the water supply, he was in favour of giving the Kenny Hill scheme a fair and independent trial. ("What about rotten ships?") He was sorry that the colony had been disgraced by sending one of them to sea. He would do anything in his power to prevent them being sent. He thanked them for the patient hearing they had accorded to them, and he hoped they would go to the poll and vote for two good men.

Mr. FREMLIN said that he had already announced his political views, and he had no political career to refer to. He had done nothing for them, but he came there to tell them what he would do if he were returned. He had been asked a question about federation. Well, he would like to see the colonies federated, but he saw difficulties in the shape of fiscal policies and the jealousy of Victoria. The day was remote, and they could not anticipate it until the colonies were connected by railway. He had considered the question of the Illawarra railway, and if there were a proposition made to construct the line he would support it, but only on the condition that the Newcastle railway was made first. (Cheers.) But they could not have railways or bridges without revenue, and whence were they to obtain that? One great source was the absentee. (Cheers.) When these drew large amounts of money from the colony from lands which were a gift to them from the Crown, and spent them in other countries, they should be taxed. ("Good man.") He was opposed to the repudiation of the interest on conditional purchases, and he hoped no candidate would yield to pressure in the matter. Let them give the selector and squatter better tenures, and let them rather pay more money for the land, which he believed they would cheerfully do. The next question he had to deal with was local option. If the principle were agreed to in Parliament, the whole people would have a voice in it, but how were the details to be carried out? He thought municipalities, parishes, or towns should have the option of saying by a majority whether they would adopt the principle or not. He would like to see a proper supervision over public-houses and the liquor sold in them, and he would also desire that the liquors sold in wholesale establishments should be examined, for the wholesale men were frequently more to blame than the publicans, so far as the selling of impure liquors was concerned. He would like to see a licensing board established, which he considered would check a great many of the present disreputable scenes in the Licensing Courts. They were all concerned in the question of immigration—Chinese and British. He was opposed to the Chinese coming to the colony. It would take very little to induce a large influx of them here. He would suggest that they place a restriction upon them generally, and especially upon their bosses, who worked them as slaves. Nearly the whole of their money went to these bosses, who when they had obtained sufficient proceeded to China, as Sir Daniel Cooper proceeded to England. (Loud cheers.) They must, however, have population in the country, but let them be of a proper class, not the class which remained about the streets idle. Instead of spending £75,000 a year on immigration, they should induce agriculturists of some means to come to the country by giving them so much land. Then their lands would be cultivated, and they would have their money in hand. He was in favour of municipal government, as he believed in decentralization, and did not like to see members coming four hundred miles and losing their independence by bunnacking after Ministers for the construction of bridges or roads. The question of free trade or protection was pretty fairly before the constituencies, and he might say, whether they gave him a vote or not, that he was not a protectionist. ["Will you close the Custom-house"?] No. He was in favour of a free port that would invite to their shores the commercial navies of the world; a free State, a free school, and a free Church, that was not dominant. (Loud cheers.)

In answer to a question, Mr. Fremlin said he was averse to payment of members.

Mr. STANLEY, who was received with cheers, said that he would be very brief, for he had held many meetings, at which he had explained his views on the important questions of the day. It had been said that he was a protectionist, but he denied this, for he was a free-trader; but at the same time he was prepared to admit that the fostering of colonial industries deserved the fullest consideration. He was totally opposed to the introduction of Chinese, but would protect those that were here; and as to British immigration, that was carried out on a mistaken principle, and it was time they had a better scheme for the introduction of a class of people better than that which had been coming here. He would suspend the present system until a better one was devised. As regarded education, he was prepared to repeat his views of three months ago. He considered the Act of 1866 a fair compromise between contending parties, and he was in favour of making a more liberal provision for Denominational schools; but he did not ask them to put him in Parliament to interfere with the present measure, for the reason that it had been passed by the representatives of the people, and the people had endorsed the actions of their representatives. He thought more importance was attached to it than circumstances required and that there were other matters of great importance the people were losing sight of. ["What are they?"] He would not, if he were returned, lend his influence to disturb the Act. ["You won't get a chance."] They had been told that a new municipalities bill would be introduced. He thought it would be a sensible measure to bring forward, for it would teach people the principle of self-government, and leave the Government free to deal with questions of magnitude. Taxation was becoming a matter of necessity for the next Parliament to deal with, although the Government had not shadowed forth the form it should take. At present it fell unjustifiably heavy on the working men, and in framing any measure of new taxation those who would act in the interests of that class would have to devote the whole of their time to their work. It was about time, to his mind, that property should pay a fair share of taxes. The present licensing system, he maintained, had a demoralizing effect upon the community, and great blame was attributable to the magistrates for it, although it was not their fault altogether. It was principally the fault of the law, which required amending, and which gave the magistrates the option of granting licenses. ["That is not the law; that is sympathy."] The next question he had to deal with was payment of members. A measure embodying this principle should have his most strenuous opposition, and he hoped it would be long in a colony like this before such a thing was introduced. Finally, he was in favour of the eight-hours movement where its adoption was practicable. ["Where's that?"] He might say that he was not present of his own free choice. He desired to retire; but a meeting of the electors would not permit him. He was not a nominee of any party, and he would not sacrifice his principles for pecuniary advantages. He left the matter of choice to them, and he would be satisfied with the result.

In answer to questions, Mr. STANLEY said he would oppose the construction of a sewer through Redfern, Waterloo, Alexandria, and Botany; and that his views on the local option principle were the same as Mr. Fremlin's.

Mr. HOGAN, who was received with cheers, said he had been the last in the field. ["And the last out."] He would promise that if they were patient he would not insult their intelligence by detaining them long. He had been on several platforms, and in addition to that he had published his political views, and to repeat these at length would be unnecessary. He was a freetrader, and had been connected with he had refused to do anything when called upon to do it. They did not expect him to initiate matters of this kind. It was usual for the electors to set their member in motion. Mr. Holtermann would be a very powerful man if, as he had said, he could secure the votes of thirty members of the Parliament to carry out these local matters. He had not been so neglectful of their interests as some might have imagined. The matter of water supply had been a crying evil for a very long time, and would increase as population increased until a source of supply was procured. He had taken action to secure relief for the people of the North Shore when they were apparently on the eve of a water famine. He had appealed to the Government, who informed him that the matter would be referred to the Engineer-in-Chief. Mr. Moriarty made a proposal; but that fell through. A deputation again waited on the Minister for Works, and Mr. Lackey promised that the matter should be further investigated. What they then asked for was only a temporary supply, from the level of Crown-street, pending the completion of the general scheme. As they were aware, a bill had been passed to supply Sydney and other towns with water. Anybody who understood the matter knew that a gravitation scheme would be the cheapest and best. Kenny's Hill was not known very much when the engineers examined the subject. As it now appeared on a more accurate survey, Kenny's Hill had been discovered as a very good place for a reservoir; and if it should be definitely decided that it was a fit site for a reservoir, its elevation was sufficient to enable a supply to be furnished to the highest parts of Sydney and St. Leonards, and that could not have been done by the Prospect scheme. In his opinion, the Government should stay their hand until this matter was inquired into. They would lose nothing by delay, and might eventually have the two schemes. He was one of those who had looked a good deal at this matter of water supply. He, with Mr. Bennett, Mr. Sutherland, and others travelled all over the proposed source of supply in 1870, at the time when it was supposed that there was only three weeks' supply in the Botany dams, and the Government were making preparations to bring water from the Nepean in tanks. He was convinced, from what he had seen, that the proposed scheme would not be sufficient in future years—how soon others would be required he could not say. Of course, that would depend upon the increase of population, and other things. The Pheasant's Nest scheme would have to be adopted, the scheme for pumping water from the Nepean, and the Loddon scheme proposed by Mr. Manning. And in connection with water supply, other places would have to be provided for; and hence he had given his cordial support last session to the bill with that object. So that there was nothing left for his friend Mr. Holtermann to attend to in reference to the supply of water to St. Leonards. It was already provided for by law. Most certainly when he was elected they had not good roads. A toll-gate was thought to be a crying grievance. Being a Minister of the Crown, he had it in his power to relieve them of that grievance. He promised that he would bring in a bill to deal with toll-gates. But he found the law amply sufficient. He found that Mr. Sutherland had the power by proclamation to remove the toll-bar. Lane Cove Road was made a main road, the sum of £75 per mile was voted for it; and the toll taken off. He thought the electors living in the locality would acknowledge that he attended to any communication they made. (Cheers.) Mr. Holtermann had made a mistake in reference to the statistics he had quoted. A great part of the money he had spoken of had been laid out in national works—railways and others—and the construction of these was a benefit to the inhabitants of St. Leonards and other towns. There would be no way of laying money out in St. Leonards. No doubt a bridge connecting the place with Sydney would be of that character. In his opinion that bridge would and ought to be constructed; but he did not think it would be done immediately. With this matter of communication with Sydney he had dealt practically. He had made inquiries of Mr. Moriarty as to the feasibility of constructing steam vessels, to convey large numbers of persons, waggons, coaches, and even tramways across. He knew Mr. Moriarty had been round the world, that he was aware that such vessels crossed from New York to Brooklyn, and that there would be no difficulty in the crossing of vessels in their harbour. He knew that the bridge across the harbour would cost a large amount of money—he would be almost afraid to say how much—and that it would be a long time in course of construction, and during the interim his idea was that there should be steam vessels of the class he had mentioned for the convenience of the large number of people residing on the North Shore, as well as the citizens of Sydney, and in July, 1879, he wrote to the Minister for Works to that effect. The reply he received was that the sum of £30,000 was placed on the estimates by Mr. Lackey; but, in the vicissitudes of political life, and Cabinet life, is came to be considered that the finances of the country were not so flourishing as formerly, and the Cabinet withdrew the estimate—or rather deferred it, with the idea that it should be put upon the additional estimates; but it was not so put on, and then a promise was made that it should appear on the loan estimates for next year, and so the matter stood at the present time. In the meantime, having the promise of the Government, he could not take the matter up, and move any resolution in the House; but, as he had stated, he had the pledge of the Government that it should be done next session; so if Mr. Holtermann were elected he would find that he had no occasion to trouble himself over this matter. In reference to the bridge over the spit, Mr. Holtermann had told them that he had looked over the statistics, but could not find the sum that Mr. Hilder had referred to. He did not suppose he could; but the fact was that he had passed a resolution in the House providing for a system of suburban railways, which he considered infinitely superior to tramways; and when he became a member of the Government, in 1878, the money was placed on the Estimates to carry out this work, and was approved of by the Cabinet; but, politically speaking, these Estimates never saw the light of day, as the Farnell Government being defeated retired from office, and the next Ministry brought in other Estimates. He might say that, while he did not wish to criticise Mr. Holtermann's politics, the question between them was simply whether he (Mr. Farnell), with his twenty years' experience in Parliament, could serve them better than Mr. Holtermann, who was without any experience. He acknowledged that he felt most anxious to be returned; but if they thought that his opponent could be more useful to them in carrying out the various national measures that might be brought before Parliament it was their right and their duty to put him in. He (Mr. Farnell) had had a great amount of experience; he had been Chairman of Committees, and indeed might have been Speaker at the time of the contest between Sir G. Wigram Allen and Mr. Wisdom; for, as they might remember, there was some mistake in respect to one vote, and Sir G. W. Allen not desiring to take any advantage had requested him (Mr. Farnell) to take his place, but he declined. He thought it was only right that he should give them an account of his past stewardship—not for the last three years, but since he was before them on accepting office. Up to that time he believed they were satisfied with him; and up to the present time he had not heard a single elector find fault with his politics. When he formed that Government he endeavoured, to the best of his ability, to carry out the work of the Government honestly. They had introduced a number of measures into the Assembly, and these measures had been taken up by their successors, thus showing that they were not only acceptable to the House but to the country. He did not mean to say that they had all been originated by his Government, for some of them extended as far back as when he was the colleague of Sir Henry Parkes. When the Government left office, he felt it to be his duty to support the new Government in carrying these measures into law, and a great number of his colleagues did the same, so he could scarcely be classed as an opponent of the Government, as he had supported most of their measures. (Hear, hear.) He did not, however, support the excise duties on tobacco and beer, nor the taxes on wool, stock, and coal. He did not support these proposals, because he thought it would be a most injurious policy to this country to tax the industries of the colony, more particularly as they were just now coming into existence. (Cheers.) The Treasurer had brought down his Estimates in December, and in his financial statement he estimated the expenditure at so much, and showed in Committee of Ways and Means that he had sufficient money to cover the amount. The Estimates were passed by the House; and four months subsequently he came down and said he had a deficit of £400,000; and asked them to resort to this taxation. After doing this, what did he do but to accept a proposal made by an hon. member that these taxes should only last for a year. That appeared to him to be simply levying blackmail for one year, and therefore he (Mr. Farnell) opposed it. But they were told some six weeks after the session closed, by Sir Henry Parkes, at Albury, that instead of having a deficit there was actually a surplus of £200,000. He did not intend to criticise the Government in any unfriendly way, but he thought they had made a great mistake in creating nine Ministers of the Crown. At one time they used to have great difficulty to get an extra Minister when they wanted one; but there was a provision in the Public Instruction Bill that the education of the children of the colony should be dealt with by a Minister for Education, and so great was the desire to get the bill passed that the provision was passed without notice. He thought the duties of the office might have been performed by the Minister for Justice, as hitherto; for it seemed a serious thing that they should have nine Ministers of the Crown in such a small population as that of this colony. In addition to this, the Minister for Justice had charge of the Judges and the whole legal department of the Government, and it was indecent and improper that the gentleman having control of the department should be allowed to plead before the Courts over which he in effect presided: but this was the case at the present time with Sir George Innes, and indeed he believed it had been an express stipulation. (Cheers.) Now, just one word in reference to the Publicans Act. The present Government had brought in a bill last session dealing with no less than eight classes of licenses. One part of the bill provided that no person should lecture in a theatre without getting a licence from the Colonial Secretary; but he would not refer to that bill further than to say that it had his opposition on that ground, and that ground alone. (Cheers.) But he wished to point out that under the old law the matter of licensing public-houses was far more stringent, but the liberality became so great that the Parliament thought the publicans were dealt with too harshly, and the present law was passed, but he did not think it had worked very well. (Applause.) Well, this was a very important question, and Mr. Holtermann mentioned a matter worthy of consideration, namely, that there ought to be some difference in the license fee for houses in the city and the interior. He had always thought that the public-houses were for the accommodation of travellers, not for mere drinking. They originated in the wayside inn established for the refreshment of the thirsty traveller. And he contended that where a person settled himself in the interior roads of the colony to supply food, drink, and accommodation to bona fide travellers, he ought not to be called on to pay so much as the holder of the license of the Royal Hotel, for instance. As they were aware, perhaps, when he was the head of the Government several deputations waited on him on the subject of public-houses. He promised he would deal with the subject. He was asked to bring in a bill to suspend the issue of licenses for a year. The bill provided only for the county of Cumberland, but power was given to the Governor to extend it to other places. This bill was prepared to enable the Government to get time to prepare a comprehensive bill, the principles for which were given to the Parliamentary draftsman to frame into a measure to be submitted to Parliament. However, the Government retired from office. He might say he had no two opinions on this point, that the power of granting licenses should be taken out of the hands of the magistrates. The only question with him was whether the principle of local option should prevail, or the matter should be left in the hands of a Board responsible to a Minister of the Crown and to Parliament. He would not be unwilling to give the principle of local option a trial; for nearly all their legislation was of an experimental character, and if it were found not to answer it could be changed. The matter was one that should have very serious consideration, and it did not follow that it would be dealt with best by those zealous people who were anxious to put down drunkenness. It seemed to him that while he was willing to give the principle of local option a fair trial there might be some difficulty in working it. Take the case of a municipality. A person of very great influence might obtain a license for a house in that municipality and shut out every one else, thus creating a monopoly, though there was room for two or three houses for the accommodation of the people. On the subject of the land law he was not going to say very much, because to do justice to it he would have to say a very great deal. He regretted that the Government did not speak out their intentions. They never said anything until Mr. Garrett made a speech at Berrima in opposition to the proposition to remit interest to the free selectors. As he had explained before in that room, he did not believe the bona fide conditional purchasers were asking for the remission of interest. He believed that the persons who were asking for it were persons of very great wealth, and it was they who would be benefited to a larger extent than the bona fide selector. In early times, when Sir George Gipps was Governor, they were aware that there was a quit-rent system, when the Home Government sought to enforce a payment of 2s. per acre on the landholders. Notwithstanding all their power, the Home Government did not succeed. They modified the rent and still they could not enforce payment; and again it was modified, and still again, until it was reduced to 6d. an acre, and the time of payment reduced from 20 years to 9 years and 9 months. He remembered this state of things in 1860, and it occurred to him then that they would have the very same difficulty with the conditional purchasers in the course of a short time—that there would be a pressure brought to bear against the payment of balances due by them to the State. What he said in 1860 was now coming about. He, for one, felt that the amount of interest was no great hardship to the selector—although he did not agree with the principle of it. These selectors, however, had made a bargain under the law, and they were bound to remain to that bargain. They had the first pick of the land, some of which was now worth from £20 to £30 per acre, and it was but fair that they should pay interest. (Cheers.) To remit the interest would be an injustice to the other part of the community. And if they remitted the interest to those who had not paid, what was to be done in the case of those who had paid? They would have to give back the interest to those selectors who had obtained the fee simple of their land. Therefore, it would be dishonest to these people and to the public to remit the interest. But they ought to follow a different course in the future. Let a price be fixed for the land so that the people could attain its possession with facility and render it productive. By their productive occupation of the lands, rather than by the price obtained for it, the country would be benefited. (Cheers.) It was population that made the land valuable and the country wealthy. With only three-quarters of a million of people, this vast territory was comparatively poor as compared with other countries of lesser size. The only reason why they should be careful in the matter of fixing a price for the land was to deal fairly with the other people whose it was, but who did not get any share of it. The principle of deferred payments was, he contended, very unsound, and he would prefer to limit the payments to eight or ten years, or, at most, he would extend them to fifteen years. It had been said that the Land Bill, with the amendments of last session, was quite sufficient—that there was nothing more to be done. But he had always characterised that law as an abortion. They had had to amend it in 1875, and again in 1880. That law could not be a good one where session after session it was found necessary, through decisions of the Supreme Court, to amend it, and it was a reflection on the Legislature which passed it. The bill of last session did very little indeed—the provision of residence for five years was about the only new thing in it. There was one most dangerous principle embodied in the bill—that empowering the Minister for Lands to sell lands by virtue of improvements, practically enabling him to make a private bargain. He could imagine a corrupt Minister sitting in his office and a person coming to him desiring to purchase land by virtue of improvements. This land might be worth £2 or £3. The Minister, however, had the power to sell at £1. He might agree with the purchaser for 30s., pocket 10s., and allow the £1 to go into the public funds. He believed that they never had a Minister that was corrupt; but still they ought not to legislate in a way by which a man would be tempted to be corrupt. He objected to the Minister being left as the sole judge of the amount tenants of the Crown should pay. In his opinion they would have again to legislate on this land question, and he hoped they would consolidate the laws into a comprehensive form. He would agitate to do all he could to have a land bill introduced into the Assembly by which they would be able to remove all the anomalies and uncertainties that existed under the present law. Everybody must admit there was great uncertainty under the present law, and that no man was safe who took up the land under it. A good deal of dummyism had gone on, but that had been the fault of the administration in the first few years of the existence of the Act, and had been due to the want of inspection at the time. In consequence, immense areas of land had gone into the possession of particular individuals; and the rich agricultural lands on the coast districts capable of yielding 120 bushels of maize per acre, or from 50 to 70 tons of sugar cane had been taken up, while back lands intrinsically not worth 2s. 6d. per acre were left. He did not care about the conditions of improvement, as the person who took up and settled on the land would necessarily improve it to the required extent. In some parts of the interior the lands were altogether unsuited for agriculture. The areas given in these cases were not sufficient for the settler. The question was then whether they should alienate larger areas or give the land holder a secure lease of adjoining lands, for they must know the pre-emptive leases were a myth. In his opinion new legislation was required. He did not wish to see the land being sold beyond public requirements, as it had been under the law. Fourteen millions of acres had been bought during three years by people who could only use it for pastoral purposes, and he contended that it did not pay to buy at £1 per acre for pastoral purposes. Notwithstanding that the Government said that they had finished everything by this short bill, he was quite positive that the people of the country would not rest satisfied to leave the law as it was. He had been told that the pastoral tenants' rents had been raised to a minimum of 10s., but he thought they would not get the large increases that some of the members of the Government seemed to think. It would, however, be ascertained about December 31 next, and not before. 7,000,000 acres of land were alienated between 1875 and 1878, but it was impossible that this quantity of land could have been taken up under the Act by the producing classes of the community, for they had not the number of people in the colony to occupy more than 1,000,000 acres. Then, who had taken up the other 6,000,000 acres? The capitalists by dummyism—(cheers)—and these were the persons who would benefit by the remission of interest. (Cheers.) Something had been said about immigration. They had lately spent £300,000 over an Exhibition for the purpose of making the country attractive. He did not think it would do it, as it had been more of an advertising mart, and that was their intention, and he thought any man who had any patriotism or interest in the colony would try to make the country as rich, powerful, and prosperous as possible, and to do this they should increase its productive powers, and this could only be done by making a number of important alterations in the land law so as to enable any one to take up land so long as it was properly cultivated. (Cheers.) He would support a properly drafted Civil service bill, but not one similar to that introduced some years ago by Mr. Stuart, which fixed the salaries of the officers but left it optional with the Assembly to cut them down, thus striking at the very principle of such a measure. He believed the municipalities of the colony were too small, and he would support any reasonable alterations, although he would oppose the division of the colony into provinces, as in New Zealand. He had always served them with all the ability he possessed, and if they chose to continue their confidence in him he would do in the future as he had done in the past. (Loud cheers.)

The RETURNING-OFFICER then called for a show of hands, which he declared to be in favour of Mr. Farnell, and a poll being demanded by Mr. Holtermann further proceedings were adjourned till Monday next when the poll will be taken.

The usual votes of thanks and cheers for the Queen concluded the proceedings.

NOMINATION AT BALMAIN.

A public meeting of electors was held, at the School of Arts, Balmain, yesterday at noon, for the nomination of candidates for the position of member for the electorate of Balmain. There was a large attendance of electors. Mr. Thomas S. Rowntree, Returning Officer, presided. The proposers and seconders were limited in their speeches to ten minutes, and the candidates to twenty minutes.

Mr. JOHN FRASER (Mayor of Leichhardt) proposed Mr. Alfred Elkington (Mayor of Balmain), and Alderman SMITH seconded the nomination.

Sir G. WIGRAM ALLEN nominated Mr. John Taylor. He congratulated the electors of Balmain upon now having the privilege of returning a member of their own, and he claimed some degree of credit for having obtained for the electors that privilege. (Cheers.) Mr. John Taylor had been one of his supporters ever since he (Sir G. Wigram Allen) first came before the electors, and Mr. Taylor had frequently brought under his notice the wants of the electorate, and induced him to press those wants upon the attention of the Ministry. (Cheers.) In connection with the reclamation of White's Bay and Johnson's Bay, Mr. Taylor had been untiring in his exertions. (Cheers.) He was a man of integrity and determination, and would serve the electors faithfully. (Cheers.)

Mr. M'LEMAN seconded the nomination. Mr. Taylor had been an alderman of Balmain for nine years and Mayor for two years, and would no doubt serve the electors equally well as their representative in Parliament.

Alderman GOW proposed Mr. Jacob Garrard. He had been fighting the battles of the working men for many years in the face of the most determined opposition. (Cheers.) If Mr. Garrard was a protectionist in the ordinary sense of the term he would not be there to support that gentleman. But there was a medium course. It was between free trade run wild and protection run mad that Mr. Garrard proposed to steer. He was equally sound upon the other political questions of the day.

Mr. CUNN seconded the nomination.

Mr. J. BARRELL nominated Mr. Charles Mossman, and Mr. J. M'DONALD seconded the nomination.

Mr. ALFRED ELKINGTON said that during his residence in Balmain no person could point the finger of scorn at him. He was the first candidate to announce himself for the electorate. He was proud of having received one of the best requisitions that had ever been presented to any young man in the country. He appeared there in opposition to no one, the fact being that the others had come out in opposition to him. (Hear, hear, and "No, no.") Those gentlemen had been his friends for many years, having been on terms of personal friendship with Mr. Taylor, Mr. Garrard, and Mr. Mossman. (Cheers.) Balmain comprised more than 3000 electors, and it was only in the hope of serving the electors that he came forward. He regretted that injudicious friends should come forward and create heart-burnings, and he desired to assure the electors that he did not wish to be a party to any such class bickerings. (Cheers.) He did not care whether a man pinned his faith to a green ribbon or an orange ribbon. (Cheers.) He pinned his faith to no party colour, except the true blue of New South Wales. (Cheers.) He hoped that that would be sufficient to set at rest a report which had been circulated during the week, of which neither he nor his committee had any cognizance. (Cheers.) When he first resolved to stand he placed before the electors unreservedly his views, and he had since found that nearly all those views, particularly in reference to local matters, had been endorsed by each of the other candidates. (Applause.) With regard to the great political questions of the day, he was a sound free trader in every sense of the term. (Applause.) Protection simply meant the impoverishment of every working man in the community. If elected, he would do all in his power to bring about the division of the country into municipal districts. Balmain possessed every facility for the output of coal, and was the real terminus of the Illawarra railway. With regard to the matter of the recreation grounds and public parks, the Municipal Council of Balmain had done a great deal towards bringing the matter under the notice of the Government, and the credit in this matter should be given to the Council as a body. He expressed himself in favour of the Kenny Hill scheme, as he considered a system of gravitation was far preferable to that of pumping. (Hear, hear.) He objected to taxation being imposed through the Custom-house. The community should be taxed upon the principle of certain European rules of adopting a fixed arrangement by which realized wealth in the colony should be taxed. That was a kind of tax that would not affect the poor man, because a man would simply be taxed in proportion to his wealth. They were all well acquainted with his views on the education question. If returned to Parliament, he would study the interests of Balmain, without at the same time sacrificing the interests of the colony as a whole. He asked them to show their confidence in him at the ballot-box, and, whatever it was, he would take their verdict kindly and acceptably. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. JOHN TAYLOR on coming forward was well received. He commenced by saying that he held the pledge of Mr. Elkington, in February last, that he would support his (Mr. Taylor's) candidature against Mr. Garrard. (Hear, hear.) In laying his views on the political topics of the day before the electors he affirmed himself a stanch free-trader, and he hoped the day would never arrive when the present policy of the country would be altered. He had been charged with trimming because he was in favour of the encouragement of local industries. He reiterated he was in favour of encouraging local industries. He held that every man in the colony had a right to buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest. He was a stanch supporter of the Education Act, and he would be no party to disturb the the operation of the Act in any shape or form He desired that the Act should have a fair and impartial trial. In speaking on the land laws, he considered that the time had arrived when the land laws based upon the Act of 1861 should be swept away altogether and substituted by a new Act, which should be brought into a small compass, so that every man in the colony could understand its provisions. The present law was so ambiguous that the Ministers could not interpret the Act themselves. (Laughter.) The squatter should have a proper tenure for his holding, and he should be made to pay for the advantages he would thus enjoy. By this means no taxation would be required for some years to come. He would be no party to the remission of the interest on the free-selectors' balances, as it was a just debt which they owed to the State. The time had arrived, through the indiscriminate selection of immigrants, when the immigration vote should cease. He would have no objection to immigration, providing the proper class of immigrants were sent out to the colony. He was opposed to the influx of Chinese into the country; but it must be remembered that England was to a large extent bound by the treaty of China, and he thought they should be careful not to do anything derogatory to that treaty. In dealing with the question of the importation of Chinese into this colony they should be cautious in any legislation they attempted. He had long held the opinion that the power of granting licenses should be taken out of the hands of the magistrates, and he thought the only remedy to cure the evils arising from the present licensing system was to adopt local option. He considered that there should be a law providing for the inspection of boilers on land, and the Marine Board should be invested with far larger powers than they possessed at present, so that unseaworthy ships could be prevented from going to sea. He was in favour of the whole of the colony being divided into municipal districts. At present there was too much localism in the influence brought to bear upon the Government in connection with the expenditure of public money. If taxation were found necessary, he would support a property tax. He would be no party to a tax on absentees alone, because that would be a class tax. He thought that a property tax would be sufficient to meet the case. He supported the manufacture of railway stock in the colony, even if they cost rather more than the imported articles. As a matter of fact, the colonial manufacturers could turn out articles equally as good and quite as cheap as the imported articles. With regard to local matters, he advocated increased school accommodation, and also a bridge from White Bay to Glebe Point. The heads of the various bays should be reclaimed, and handed over to the district for recreation grounds. He had been in many contests, and he had never been a defeated one yet, and he hoped that this would not be his first experience of defeat. (Cheers.) He regretted that personalities had been introduced into this contest, and thought that some of the placards that had been posted about the borough were a disgrace to those who had circulated them. (Cheers.)

Mr. GARRARD, who was well received, said that the first speaker had claimed that he was the first candidate, and that all those who came after him were his opponents. He had been told by Mr. Elkington that he should have a walk-over because he was the Mayor of the borough. (Dissent.) When he (Mr. Garrard) was elected an alderman of the borough, he stated that if no better man came forward he would contest the next Parliamentary election. Therefore, instead of being an opponent of Mr. Elkington, that gentleman was an opponent of his. (Cheers.) He supported the present Education Act because in a mixed community it was impossible for the State to undertake the teaching of religion. (Cheers.) He considered that the land laws should be considerably amended. He looked with alarm upon the extension of large estates. Look, for instance, at the unfortunate differences that existed in one part of our empire because the lands were locked up in the hands of a few. (Hear, hear.) His sympathies were with the free selectors. He believed in the principle of Sir John Robertson's bill of 1861; and although that gentleman had tried to carry out the principles of that law in consequence of the loopholes in the law and the dishonest dummies among the selecting and squatting classes, he failed to do so. He looked with alarm upon any law which opposed one class to another,—which promoted antagonism between the squatting and selecting classes. He did not agree with the abolition of the interest due from the free selectors. (Cheers.) He approved of the suggestion made by the recent Selectors' Conference—to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into the working of the land laws, in order that Parliament may know what defects demand immediate remedy. With regard to the local option principle, he thought that it was generally conceded that we had in almost all localities an undue preponderance of public-houses. The people of a particular locality were the best judges as to whether they should have a greater or lesser number of public-houses in that locality. For that reason he supported the principle of local option. On the subject of free trade and protection, he was pleased to see that so many had now come to his way of thinking, and declared themselves supporters of the principles that he and a few others had been maintaining for many years in the face of the most determined opposition. At the same time he protested against those persons taking credit for what he had been battling for during years past. He was not a protectionist, but he maintained that the Government were bound to foster colonial industries in every legitimate way. The subject of locomotives had been mentioned. He wondered which of the candidates had done most to enforce the Government to have the manufacture of locomotives kept within the colony. Who, among the candidates, had done anything to keep public attention alive to that matter except himself? He was in favour of an amendment in our mercantile marine laws. Few persons were really acquainted with the unsafe condition of some of the boilers on land, and he considered that the Government should appoint an efficient engineer to inspect them. He was thoroughly opposed to the present system of immigration, and also to the influx of Chinese into this country. He had no money to spend on his election, and if he had he would not devote it to such a purpose. (Hear, hear.) He would point to his past career as evidence of the consistency of his views and the soundness of his principles. (Hear, hear.) While being fully alive to the local interests of that constituency, he would not enter Parliament, if elected, merely as a municipal councillor, but would devote his earnest attention to the general welfare of the colony. Whatever the result of the election contest might be, he thanked them heartily for the attentive hearing that had been accorded to him at the various meetings he had held in the district. (Cheers.)

Mr. C. MOSSMAN denied that there was any truth in the reports which had been circulated to the effect that he had received the sum of £100 in order to come forward and oppose one of the other candidates. (Laughter.) In regard to the Public Instruction Act, he maintained that the question had been definitely settled. The question that should mainly occupy the attention of Parliament next session, was that of taxation. He was a free-trader, but he advocated that when the Government called for tenders for public works the money should be expended in the colony. He expressed his opposition to the influx of Chinese into this colony. He was also opposed to the £40 required to be deposited by candidates, which he considered an encroachment on the privileges of universal suffrage. He was of opinion that the country should be divided into municipal districts or shires, and advocated a reconstruction of the Marine Board, and a proper inspection of boilers on land. He was opposed to the present system of immigration, and the remission of interest on the free selectors' balances. The eight-hours system would have his firm support. He based his candidature on a 20 years residence in Balmain, during which period he claimed to have done a good deal for the benefit of the working men.

The Returning-Officer called for a show of hands, the result being in favour of Alderman Garrard.

A poll was demanded.

The proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the Returning-Officer.

ELECTORATE OF CANTERBURY.

A very large and influential meeting of the electors was held on Tuesday night, at Paris's Hotel, Croydon, to hear Mr. Pigott express his political views. Mr. D. Holborow, the Mayor of Ashfield, was voted into the chair, and, in introducing the candidate, paid a very high tribute to his ability, his straightforwardness, and his knowledge, particularly of municipal government. Mr. Pigott was received with cheers which were very frequently repeated during the delivery of his address. He referred to his candidature for the representation of Canterbury several years ago, when notwithstanding that he contested the election against the then members, that he was only five days in the field, that great numbers of the electors had given pledges to support the old members, and that he fought the battle of the League, he was placed at the head of the poll at every place in which he delivered a speech and polled the same number of votes as had returned Mr. Hill at the head of the poll at a previous election. Mr. Pigott explained his views on the political questions of the day, stating his adherence to the principles of the Public Instruction Act, free trade, local option in the licensing laws, the extension of the railway into Sydney, and the construction of the railway to Illawarra, non-payment of members, &c. The usual vote,—"That Mr. Pigott is a fit and proper person to represent the electorate"—was proposed by Mr. Ross, seconded by Mr. Abbott, and supported by Messrs. Graham and Pring, and carried unanimously and with acclamation. A very influential committee was formed, and the proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman, carried by acclamation.

An influential and enthusiastic meeting of the friends and supporters of Mr. William Henson was held in the Oddfellows' Hall, Ashfield, last Monday evening. Mr. Joseph H. Watkin was voted to the chair. Mr. Henson, who was received with expressions of favour, said that he was a strong supporter of Sir Henry Parkes and Mr. W. H. Pigott, and that if those two gentlemen were candidates for this constituency, he should have declined to contest the election. Sir H. Parkes having sought the suffrages of the electors of East Sydney, and his friends not being satisfied with the other candidates in the field for Canterbury had invited him (Mr. Henson) to stand, and in answer to their request he appeared before them to solicit their vote and interest at the forthcoming election. The coalition Government had been denounced in strong terms by Mr. Farnell and others, but he (Mr. Henson) was of the opinion that the coalition Government was one of the best things that could have happened for the good of the country. In consequence of this amalgamation many measures had been passed by the Parliament and become law, which he believed would prove a lasting benefit to the country. With reference to education, he (Mr. Henson) had always been a firm, active, and faithful supporter of the League for making education "National, Secular, Compulsory, and Free," and he looked upon the present Instruction Act as one of the greatest boons the country had ever known, and that he should support the Act in its entirety. He would give the Kenny Hill water scheme a thorough investigation, and support that scheme which would give the best and most reliable supply of pure water. The licensing system, as at present administered, he did not believe in, and thought that some great reform was necessary. He (Mr. Henson) should support the introduction of the local option system. The Chinese immigration to these colonies he was strongly opposed to and would support any measure for the prevention of their introduction to the colony. The extension of the railway to Illawarra would open up a very large fertile country, and would, he believed, prove a success. He (Mr. Henson) would support a resolution for the construction of this railway and also the extension of the railway to the Circular Quay. Although the eight hours' system could not well be applied to all trades and classes of work people, yet he believed that in many trades it could be adopted with advantage to the employer and employed, and he should support its introduction. With reference to free trade he (Mr. Henson) had always been a stanch advocate of the principles of free trade, and he could not, from conscientious convictions, support any other system. The Legislative Council, he was of opinion, should be elective, so that no Ministry could have the power of appointing a number of persons as members to carry into law any measure which would not be for the good of the country and the people. He (Mr. Henson) was convinced from experience that honest and legitimate free selectors improved the value of the lands of the colony, but he could not, and would not support a resolution for the remission of the interest to the free selectors. A contract had been fairly and honestly entered into, and he considered that it would be a breach of faith to remit any portion of the payments. He (Mr. Henson) would support a well-devised immigration scheme for the introduction of a proper class of persons, who would settle upon and improve the lands of the colony. With reference to municipalities, he was in favour of an increased endowment, and of larger powers being given to the Councils, and would propose a property tax upon all land outside of municipalities, so that the owners may be made to contribute their share towards the maintenance of the roads and bridges of the colony. At the conclusion of Mr. Henson's address several questions were put to the candidate and answered satisfactorily. Upon the motion of Mr. John Wheeler, seconded by Mr. J. W. Watkin, and supported by Mr. Alderman Cubitt, it was carried by acclamation,—"That Mr. William Henson, J.P., is a fit and proper person to represent the electorate of Canterbury in the forthcoming Parliament." A large and influential committee was formed to secure Mr. Henson's return. A vote of thanks to the chairman closed the proceedings.

Alderman Moss, of Ashfield, met the electors at Rodgers' Hotel, Canterbury. Mr. Thomas Perrott, chairman of the Local School Board, was in the chair, and, in a few well chosen and eulogistic terms, introduced the candidate, who then gave a clear and lucid exposition of his views, declaring himself a stanch supporter of the Public Instruction Act, free trade, a new Licensing Act with local option, Civil Service reform, railway to Illawarra, also all main trunk lines, and line from Redfern to Circular Quay, against the remission of interest on the unpaid balances of selectors, but in favour of increased area with fixity of tenure on conditional selections, and in favour of fixity of tenure on the pastoral leases, with increased rental, and fourteen days' notice of selection; against Chinese immigration; strong advocate for the extension of municipalities, with an increased endowment; also for thoroughly testing the Kenny Hill water supply scheme, and all other matters of a public and local nature. Mr. Moss was well received, and frequently applauded whilst delivering his address to the electors. The meeting was large and orderly: and at its conclusion it was moved by Mr. Lester, and seconded by Mr. Brown, and supported by Mr. Perrott,—"That Alderman George Moss is a fit and proper person to represent the Canterbury electorate in the new Parliament," which was carried unanimously.

YASS ELECTORATE.

Last night Mr. Fitzpatrick met the electors in the hall of the Mechanics' Institute. The building was crowded. The speaker was frequently loudly applauded, and his reception must have proved very gratifying to him. He spoke for an hour and a half, and commenced by reminding his hearers that he had now completed an unbroken service to the constituency of eleven years, the sessions being on an average nine months, the sitting four nights a week at least, and extending generally beyond midnight. In allusion to the praises bestowed by the Press on the present Government for their legislation, he argued that there were only two or three bills of any value passed during the past session, such as the Public Instruction Bill and the Electoral Bill. The bills for which credit had been bestowed by the public on Sir Henry Parkes's Government were introduced and partly completed by the Farnell Government, such as the Lunacy Bill, the Sydney Corporation Bill, and the Bill to Regulate Water Supply and Sewerage for Sydney and its Suburbs. The public Press, he said, was unable to explain how it was that for the first time the Government had done so much work. Mr. Fitzpatrick explained that for many years past the business of the country was impeded by one or other of the knights now in coalition. When Sir Henry Parkes, being in favour, introduced any bill, Sir John Robertson felt bound to oppose it; and when the latter was in favour his every effort was thwarted by the former. Conscious of this bad state of things, the citizens of both East and West Sydney, at the election of 1877, rejected these champions. Then, after a time, the Farnell Government was formed. That Government conducted the business of the country efficiently and well till they were defeated by the shameless coalition of Sir Henry Parkes and Sir John Robertson, men who, whatever they might now say over the festive board, hated, and still hate each other. Mr. Fitzpatrick next addressed himself to various points in the land laws, especially the proposed remission of interest on free selections. Many public writers had characterised this proposal as repudiation, and Sir Henry Parkes had ventured to denounce it to burglary. The proposal which he (Mr. Fitzpatrick) had made eleven years ago, and which he had restored to at every election since involved no repudiation. It was simply a proposal to amend a bad law. The law was bad for the public, because there was no legal means to enforce payments of balances of selections made before 1875, and it was bad for the selectors, many of whom were simply unable to pay the balances. What he proposed was that every penny paid by the selectors of the colony should count as principal. Those who selected in 1862 had already paid sixteen years' interest, or 12s. per acre, and a deposit of 5s. per acre, making in all 17s. per acre; besides making improvements exceeding one pound per acre, and they still had the whole balance to pay. If the law were altered as he desired, these early selectors would continue to pay for four or five years more, and then they would receive their deeds. In like manner those who selected later would continue to pay for longer periods, and then be free. This was the only way in which the revenue would suffer. It would continue to be reduced four or five years hence, and the whole transaction would be complete in twenty-eight years. So much for the alleged abandonment of nine millions of money. The next point referred to was the education question. Mr. Fitzpatrick gave a clear history of his connection with the Public school question from the beginning, which was in effect from the introduction into this colony of the present school books by his late master, the Rev. Hy. Carmichael, who induced Sir Richard Bourke to try to establish public teaching on Lord Stanley's system. In 1866 he promoted a public meeting which passed resolutions to strengthen Mr. Parkes' hands in dealing with the bill introduced by him, which in effect proposed to get rid of denominational schools. He explained that his speech this year was a defence of the system of teaching laid down in that Act. During the last 6 or 7 years attempts had been made in Parliament to alter that system, which attempts were successfully resisted by Sir Henry Parkes and himself. He then referred to the efforts of Mr. William Forster, Mr. David Buchanan, Mr. G. R. Dibbs, and Mr. Greenwood. Sir Henry Parkes was considered as a good honest citizen for resisting these attempts, and now he was regarded as a hero for effecting the like proposals himself. Mr. Fitzpatrick appealed to the whole colony to say why Sir Henry Parkes was bespattered with praise for changing his old policy while he (Mr. Fitzpatrick) was accused of inconstancy for adhering to the policy for the expression of which he was first returned for Yass Plains. He now promised that in the future he would not make any effort to disturb the existing law with the view of reintroducing aid to Denominational schools. He had no fondness for Denominational schools, and had voted against the bill only because he considered an injustice was done by it to the few schools of the character then under the Council of Education. He thought very little merit attached to the Electoral Bill, which was a poor copy of the Act of 1858. He then dwelt on the conduct of Sir Henry Parkes in forbidding the lecture of Mr. Proctor on Sunday afternoon, whilst he permits lectures every Sunday before and since avowedly hostile to Christianity. The remainder of the speech consisted chiefly of disapproval of the Government for their dismissal of Mr. Slattery, their disrating Mr. W. W. Stephen, and the quarrel of the Government with South Australia respecting the Border duties. The usual approval of Mr. Fitzpatrick was passed unanimously. Mr. Thomas Colls occupied the chair.

GUNNEDAH ELECTORATE.

GUNNEDAH, WEDNESDAY.

Mr. J. P. Abbott held another meeting here last evening, at the School of Arts, and had a crowded attendance. He was very well received and his views, which were only a repetition of those contained in his previous address, left a most favourable impression upon the electors present. He pledged himself, if returned, to support any movement that would enable us to find an outlet for our surplus meat; also to push the connection of the Northern railway with Sydney. It is expected that Mr. Abbott and Mr. Brown will be the only candidates in the end. The latter is now canvassing the outside districts.

YOUNG ELECTORATE.

TEMORA, WEDNESDAY.

Mr. P. W. Crowe addressed the electors yesterday. His speech was condemnatory of the Government, and principally remarkable for the fact that the speaker unmistakably pointed to severing our connection with the mother country, maintaining that the colonies were not bound by treaties entered into by England.

TO THE ELECTORS OF WEST SYDNEY.

Fellow-citizens,—As an old colonist of over half a century of knowledge of the colony's requirements, as one who knows every patch of country worth occupying in Australia, as one having a very large stake in your division of the city, I offer myself as a Candidate for your suffrages.

Intimately associated with the progress of New South Wales, I have no interest but that of our common welfare. I will simply, and as concisely as possible, place before you my sentiments, and not having the gift of saying where the contrary views of right and wrong begin, I pronounce myself as follows:—

I have spent the best years of my life in squatting ventures, and I well know the changes that take place in such a position. Thus knowing, I favour an increased rental, a tenure of, say ten years, and, in the meantime, a right to purchase any portion of the holding the lessee may think fit.

I am a thorough supporter of the new education measure, knowing as I do the deficiencies that prevail among the youth of our land. At the same time, if the intelligence of the country—which must always prevail—demands a change, I shall be prepared to give the matter my most grave consideration.

The early part of my lifetime having been spent in the interior, I have a full appreciation of the troubles the settlers upon the land are subjected to. I shall use my position as your representative in bringing about a more satisfactory arrangement of this matter in the future.

I oppose out and out the introduction of Chinese, and my knowledge of the labour market of the colony fortifies me in the opinion that it would be wise to check at once and for ever their introduction into fair Australia.

The eight hours system of labour has always held my warmest advocacy and most sincere sympathy. No man amongst the whole of your constituency knows more than I do the value of rest after a day's hard work, and I know that an honest worker can put through a bigger day's work in eight hours than a hanger-on can in a fourteen more time. I shall endeavour to force upon the Government—no matter who may hold place and power—that in all future contracts the eight hours system shall prevail.

I own no party. Robertson, Parkes, Farnell, or Fitzpatrick, have no charms for me. My ambition at my time of life is to do my best to serve the country that has so well served me, and to which I feel so fervently attached. I seek your suffrages upon plain simple, open, honest grounds. I know no friend but Australia; no foe but those who would retard its progress. I have the will, the time, and, pardon me, gentlemen, if I say the ability, to serve you without serving myself. I shall go forward with honesty, truth, and integrity as my motto to gain your votes, and to endeavour to gain for you and our great colony at large that grand position she must eventually arrive at—"mistress of the southern hemisphere."

My opinion and my determined resolution is, that in every instance where work can be produced in the colony—even at the risk of a loss of 25 per cent.—that work should be given to local manufacturers, because no matter can be clearer than that, the money being kept in the colony amongst us, it must, of necessity, be reproductive—the Sydney Morning Herald notwithstanding.

Upon the principles I have thus shadowed forth I am prepared to stand or fall. I know confident of the colony to be able, without grating, to be clear of jobbyism; and, far and above all, to do my duty as your representative, should you honour me with your confidence, faithfully, fearlessly, and honestly, caring not for power or place, for myself or for my friends; but whilst I am spared amongst you, Electors of West Sydney, and the colony at large, in my fading years to endeavour to gain respect for myself and honour to those who sustain me in my efforts to be returned as one of your representatives.

In all sincerity yours,
JOHN HARRIS (the elder).

Shane's Park, 13th November, 1880.

JOHN HARRIS, of Shane's Park, popularly known as BIG-HEARTED JACK, will go to the Poll for West Sydney. Electors, give him one vote, he don't ask for plumpers; but please yourselves.

WEST SYDNEY ELECTION.—Keep your eyes firmly fixed on the Ballot Paper, and leave the name of JOHN HARRIS, the elder, unblotted on MONDAY next, the day of polling.

JOHN HARRIS (the Big 'Un) FOR WEST SYDNEY.—Truth, faithfulness, and the power and will to serve you. Allow his name to remain on your Ballot Paper on MONDAY next.

JOHN HARRIS (not Alderman John) is out for West Sydney. Working men, you know how sincere a friend he is. Vote for him.

QUARRYMEN, MASONS, and all connected with the Building Trades, you know how well-disposed Old Jack Harris (you know, Big Jack) is towards you—open-handed, generous-hearted, strictly truthful. You cannot err in giving him one of your votes.

OLD JACK HARRIS will act truly, consistently, and firmly in the interests of the people of West Sydney. Nothing to fear, no favour to covet, no office to seek; but willing to faithfully assist in advancing our colony and people to the front rank among the Australias. West Sydneyites, leave his name untouched.

NATIVES OF THE COLONY.—You who have the privilege of voting, do your very best by your votes and all the persuasion in your power, to secure the services of JOHN HARRIS, the elder, as one of your representatives for West Sydney.

BIG JACK HARRIS for West Sydney, not the Alderman, bear in mind; but Old John, the true and tried friend of the working man. No talker, but a solid thinker.

WEST SYDNEY ELECTION.

TO JOHN WOODS, Esq.

Sir,—We, the undersigned electors of West Sydney, being desirous of securing your services as one of our representatives in the Legislative Assembly, respectfully request you to become a Candidate at the ensuing General Election.

In the course of a public career, extending over many years, it has been gratifying to notice that you have generally given an adhesion to views of a liberal and progressive character, and when necessity required it you have never been backward in denouncing incapacity or corruption.

We trust that your general intelligence, together with your activity, may not be allowed to be dormant; but that you will meet our views by allowing yourself to be put in nomination, and in the event of your so doing, we pledge ourselves to use our united exertions to secure your return.

We are, Sir,
Your obedient servants,

James Fennell, J.P.	Wm. Jas. Coulter
John Robertson	James Powell
Jacob Marks, J.P.	Thomas Donaghy
George Hurley	Joseph Kendall
John Taylor, J.P.	Philip Hart
Wm. M'Credie	Thomas J. Chapman, J.P.
Alex. M'Credie	James K. Allen
R. F. Stubbs	and 585 other electors.

November, 1880.

Gentlemen,—In response to your very flattering requisition, inviting me to allow myself to be nominated as a Candidate for West Sydney in the forthcoming election, I regret exceedingly my inability to comply with your request, as circumstances have arisen within the last few months which prevent my entering at present into active political life.

I may inform you that I had fully determined on giving more of my attention to political affairs; and but for the reasons already stated, your influential and thoroughly representative requisition would now have been gladly accepted by me.

I was much moved on my return from a neighbouring colony at receiving your grateful recognition of my past public services, and I can assure you sincerely that, though I may remain for the present out of Parliament, that "activity" and "intelligence" you speak of will still be employed as heretofore, in the furtherance of any movement identified with the public welfare.

I hope that the next opportunity of an election for West Sydney, with whose interests I have been identified ever since the inauguration of responsible Government, will find me in a position to place my services at the disposal of so large and influential a constituency.

I remain, gentlemen,
Yours faithfully,
JOHN WOODS.

TO THE ELECTORS OF WEST SYDNEY.

Gentlemen,—At the request of a large and influential number of electors who know me, I have consented to become a candidate for one of the seats at your disposal in the new Parliament. I have no object to serve in seeking election, unless it be the ambition—well-ordered I trust—to benefit my country and generation.

As I purpose addressing you publicly in the several parts of the electorate, I will only just now shadow forth my political sentiments.

First, the Education Act I am thoroughly in favour of, and will strive to preserve intact.

I am opposed to the introduction of Chinese into the country.

I would like to see the Liquor Licensing Act altered very much and Local Option tried.

I am in favour of the Extension of the Railway round Darling Harbour to Circular Quay; also a Railway to Illawarra and Newcastle.

I would never consent to the Remission of Selectors' Interest, nor to the Payment of Members.

Nor do I like the present system of Indiscriminate Immigration.

Free Trade, as a general principle, I certainly approve; but I would give the preference to our own manufactures and products.

I would like to see Municipalities extended, Insolvency Act altered; also the Mercantile Marine Act; Technical Schools taken in hand by the Government, and Agricultural Schools established.

Should my sentiments be sound, and in accordance with yours, I hope to be honoured with your support.

I am, gentlemen,
Yours very respectfully,
WM. FRASER MARTIN,
Church-hill.

PIGOTT and HENSON for Progress.

TO THE FREE AND INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF CANTERBURY.

Gentlemen,—At the request of many influential residents and electors, I have the honour to announce myself as a candidate for one of the seats for Canterbury in the new Parliament, and I at once place before you my views on the principal questions of the day.

EDUCATION.—I should support the present Act most strenuously, as it is, in my opinion, one of the grandest in the world.

FREE TRADE.—I am a stanch advocate for a free and unfettered commerce.

LAND ACT.—I am entirely opposed to the remission of interest to the selectors, but would advocate giving them an increased area. I am also in favour of fixity of tenure to the pastoral lessee, with increased rental, and 14 days' notice of selection, so that the squatter should be protected from blackmail by being enabled to remove his stock after notice of selection had been given to him.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION I am totally opposed to.

LICENSING ACT.—I am in favour of a new Act with the local option clause.

MUNICIPALITIES.—I am in favour of extending municipalities and increased endowment.

RAILWAYS.—I would strongly urge the extension from Redfern to the Circular Quay; and also the Illawarra line, together with pushing on all main trunk lines of the colony.

WATER SUPPLY.—I am strongly impressed with Mr. Gippe' high-level project, and would exert every influence to have this scheme properly tested by the Government before they made a final decision.

I am also in favour of an absentee tax, wheel tax, and the abolition of tolls, an elective Upper House, federation of the colonies, and the eight-hours movement. It is unnecessary for me to say that all matters of a local nature should have my strict attention, for, having a large vested interest in the electorate is, I think, a sufficient guarantee (our wants being identical) that I should always support anything that would tend to promote the welfare of us all. These being my views, I trust, if they accord with your own, and should you deem me possessed of sufficient integrity and ability to faithfully advocate them in Parliament for the advancement and common good of this my native land, I shall esteem it a high honour to be favoured with a share of your confidence and support on Monday next, the day of election.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your faithful servant,
GEO. MOSS.

Huntingdon, Ashfield, November 13, 1880.

To Squatters, Capitalists, and Speculators.

FOR SALE,
The grand and highly-improved Estate
COOMBING PARK,
comprising 8092 acres of the richest freehold land.

One of the most desirable properties in the colony.

CLEMENTS and M'CARTHY are favoured with instructions from the Proprietor, T. B. Isely, Esq., who is about visiting Europe, to sell by public auction, on WEDNESDAY, the 8th December next, at the Chamber of Commerce, Sydney, at 2.30 p.m.,
The almost unequalled Freehold Property, known as Coombing Park, consisting of 8092 acres—in a square block—of rich black dam, and undulating slopes, of red and chocolate soil, which for other agricultural or pastoral purposes cannot be surpassed.

The whole is securely fenced with new cattle and sheep proof fences, of very superior description, and subdivided into fourteen (14) paddocks—all both cattle and sheep proof—over which English grasses have been scattered, providing fattening pasturage, rarely excelled; and each paddock is abundantly watered.
Coombing Park, long and well known as one of the choicest early properties, has been written of by many whose opinions are valued as possessing in an eminent degree the beauties, conveniences, and surroundings which constitute the joys pure and of a gentleman's home.
It has two daily posts from the metropolis.
A telegraph office within two miles.
Is at present 12 miles by a splendid macadamised road from the Blayney railway station, and is on the direct line of the surveyed railway to connect the Western and the Southern lines, which, when completed, will bring the homestead within six hours of Sydney and sixteen of Melbourne.
Coombing House stands in the middle of the garden, has an unusually wide and pretty verandah, fourteen rooms, many of which are large, with every convention and convenience for a large family, including cellar, dairy, &c., &c.
The climate is of the healthiest, being 2200 feet above the level of the sea, and the general surroundings of the homestead command continual admiration. Trollope, in the latter part of his chapter on the scenery of New South Wales, specially speaks of it, and winds up by describing the garden as a "wilderness of loveliness."
The property is all effectually ringed and abundantly watered, having double frontages to the Belubula River and the Coombing, the Mandurama, and the Park Creeks, none of which were ever known to be dry, besides several dams and springs.
The woolshed, farm buildings, overseer's cottage, and stables, all at a pleasant distance from the house, say 300 yards, are of brick and stone with iron roofs, very superior and extensive, with every convenience, and all in first-class order.
Intending purchasers will meet with every facility for inspecting, upon giving either the Auctioneers or the Proprietor twenty-four hours' notice by letter or wire.
Title perfect. Terms liberal.
For further particulars apply to the Auctioneers,
William-street, Bathurst.

TITLE, TORRENS' ACT.
Terms at Sale.

NEXT SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

In the ESTATE of the late Mr. JAMES RICHARD CLARKE, to close the TRUSTS of the WILL.

ONION'S POINT,
PARRAMATTA RIVER,
PARISH OF HUNTER'S HILL.

THAT MAGNIFICENT BLOCK OF LAND, in area 9 ACRES, having frontages to the MAIN ONION'S POINT ROAD and the PARRAMATTA RIVER, together with the STONE RESIDENCE thereon.

RICHARDSON and WRENCH have received instructions to sell by public auction,
ON THE GROUND,
SATURDAY, 27th NOVEMBER,
at 3 o'clock,
That grand water frontage BLOCK OF LAND AT ONION'S POINT, PARRAMATTA RIVER, subdivided as follows:—
SECTION 1.—Ten Villa Sites, having frontages of 55½ feet to 66 feet to Clarke-street (now WOOLWICH ROAD), Margaret-street, and Alfred-street, with depths of 150 feet to 220 feet.

SECTION 2.—NINE CHOICE SITES, having 50 FEET to 100 FEET frontages to CLARKE-STREET (now Woolwich Road), MARGARET-STREET, and ALFRED-STREET, with depths of 130 FEET to 210 FEET.

SECTION 3.—Seven waterside Villa Sites, having from 62 FEET to 127 FEET frontages to ALFRED-STREET and the PARRAMATTA RIVER, with depths of 240 FEET and upwards.
On Lot 1 is a stone Cottage Residence, with all necessary family conveniences.

☞ This is the only water frontage subdivision on Parramatta River now before the public for auction sale, and it is now a difficult matter to obtain suitable marine sites so handy to steamer communication of the city.
The subdivision has been so arranged by Mr. Surveyor Bishop that each lot has a most suitable site for a residence.
A public wharf is to be erected immediately at the property for the river steamers to call at, in order to take in and put down passengers at intervals during the day.
The Lane Cove steamers set down passengers at Onion's Point, 3 minutes' walk from the property, every hour during the day; and intending purchasers are requested to inspect the subdivision prior to day of sale.

☞ A SPECIAL STEAMER will leave the Parramatta Steamers' Wharf, foot of King-street, at 2.15 p.m. on day of sale, calling at Darling-street Ferry Wharf.

☞ The AUCTION PLAN is now on view at the Rooms, and LITHOS. are ready for distribution.
Messrs. PERRY and DEANE, Elizabeth-street, are Solicitors of the Estate.
The terms will be liberal.

SUBURBAN HOMES AND GARDENS.

Plenty of Land at the delightful suburb of HOMEBUSH.

BUSHY HILL. LAND IS TO BE OBTAINED AT HOMEBUSH AT MODERATE RATES, AND THE LOCATION IS SO HEALTHY AND SALUBRIOUS that pretty villas and cottages, surrounded by gardens, are springing up all round, and Homebush will soon be the most favourite place of residence on the line.

BUSHY HILL. GREAT IMPROVEMENTS ARE ABOUT TO BE MADE AT HOMEBUSH STATION, and communication with the city will be so increased as to bring Homebush, by that means, as near to Sydney as Burwood now is.

BUSHY HILL. POPULATION MUST BE ATTRACTED BY THE MANY ADVANTAGES OFFERED BY THIS CHARMING SUBURB, and, as a consequence, land will increase in value enormously; therefore purchasers of "Bushy Hill" will not only procure the most desirable building sites, but the LAND WILL BE SOLD AT SUCH A PRICE AS WILL ENABLE PERSONS OF MODERATE MEANS TO ACQUIRE SUFFICIENT FOR A GARDEN AND HOMESTEAD, which in a few years will have so much increased in value as to enable the fortunate owners to realise a large profit, if desired.

BUSHY PARK, HOMEBUSH, for AUCTION SALE, on the GROUND, SATURDAY next, November 20, 3.30 p.m., by HARDIE and GORMAN.

BUSHY PARK. MONEY INVESTED IN A RISING AND IMPROVING SUBURB CANNOT FAIL TO BE PROFITABLY EMPLOYED, EVERY NEW HOUSE ERECTED ADDS TO THE VALUE OF THE LAND IN ITS NEIGHBOURHOOD, and where so many advantages can be obtained as are offered at Bushy Hill investors need not hesitate.

BUSHY HILL. IN SELECTING LAND FOR PURCHASE VISITORS SHOULD SEEK AN IMPROVING SUBURB, possessing natural advantages, also several land healthy sites, where the surroundings are desirable and picturesque, and always near a Railway station.

BUSHY HILL. SUCH LAND CAN BE FOUND AT BUSHY HILL, which has been liberally subdivided into large allotments, facing wide roads, with perfect drainage, and where no small tenements are likely to be crowded together.

BUSHY HILL. THE ALLOTMENTS ARE ALL NEARLY 200 FEET DEEP, AND ANY PURCHASER CAN SECURE A BLOCK OF 400 FEET, WITH A FRONTAGE TO TWO WIDE STREETS.

BUSHY HILL. THERE ARE NO NARROW LANES, BUT WIDE ROADS divide the property, which is bounded by Homebush Road and Redmyre Boulevard on two sides.

BUSHY HILL. BUSHY HILL IS ONLY 8 MINUTES' WALK FROM HOMEBUSH station in a direct line, the road passes through most beautiful country; Redmyre station is within 12 minutes' walk of the property, so that buyers will have a choice.

HOMEBUSH. THIS SPLENDID PROPERTY will be sold by auction, on the ground on Saturday Afternoon, November 20, WITHOUT RESERVE, and THE TERMS will be VERY EASY: 10 per cent. deposit, the balance, extending over 3 years, at 6 per cent.

SUBURBAN HOMES AND GARDENS.

BUSHY HILL,
HOMEBUSH.

AUCTION SALE, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20.

AUCTION SALE, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20.

BUSHY HILL is EIGHT MINUTES' walk from Homebush Station, and twelve minutes' walk from Redmyre.

BUSHY HILL is on the HOMEBUSH ROAD, in a direct line from the Station.

BUSHY HILL is bounded on one side by the REDMYRE BOULEVARD, leading direct to the village.

BUSHY HILL is SPLENDIDLY ELEVATED LAND, with fine slopes, and is lightly timbered with turpentine trees.

BUSHY HILL, HOMEBUSH, FOR AUCTION SALE, ON THE GROUND, SATURDAY NEXT, NOVEMBER 20, 3.30 p.m., by HARDIE and GORMAN.

BUSHY HILL is surrounded by GREEN FIELDS and HOME PARKS, and is close to many palatial residences.

BUSHY HILL is liberally subdivided into large ALLOTMENTS, and in such a way that any purchaser can secure a BLOCK OF NEARLY 400 FEET DEEP, having a frontage to two wide roads.

BUSHY HILL. THERE ARE NO SMALL ALLOTMENTS, and only a few less than 200 feet deep—the rise is to low land on the estate, which is on a hill side.

BUSHY HILL. THE SURROUNDINGS ARE MOST RURAL and picturesque, and glimpses of fine woodland scenery are obtainable from any part of BUSHY HILL.

BUSHY HILL. THERE ARE NO BACK LANES, OR NARROW ROADS on the property, and the drainage is perfect.

BUSHY HILL. BUSHY HILL IS QUITE IN THE COUNTRY, though only 8 MINUTES' walk from Homebush Station, and within a FEW MINUTES' RIDE OF THE CITY.

HOMEBUSH. This suburb IS NOT AFFECTED BY THE STRONG SEA BREEZE, which is so injurious to many.

HOMEBUSH. Residents of the overcrowded suburbs are already moving further out, and HOMEBUSH IS RAPIDLY IMPROVING. What is required can be found at Bushy Hill. OPEN COUNTRY, PURE AIR, CHEAP LAND, AND LONG TERMS.

BUSHY HILL, HOMEBUSH, FOR AUCTION SALE, ON THE GROUND, SATURDAY NEXT, NOVEMBER 20, 3.30 p.m., by HARDIE and GORMAN.

BUSHY HILL. To the above advantages can be added LAND EIGHT MINUTES' WALK FROM A STATION, frequent and speedy communication with the city, a suburb rapidly rising in public favour—SUCH CAN BE FOUND AT BUSHY HILL.

BUSHY HILL. THIS SPLENDID PROPERTY will be sold by auction on the Ground, WITHOUT RESERVE, on November 20.

BUSHY HILL. THE TERMS ARE TEN PER CENT. DEPOSIT, BALANCE EXTENDING OVER TWO YEARS AT FIVE PER CENT.

BUSHY HILL. Lithographs are now ready, and inspection is invited.

HARDIE and GORMAN, Auctioneers.
